Childhood, French-American Mr. Tugwell's Little Girl Holland Buys Planes Reverend Webber Knows

By ARTHUR BRISBANE

(Copyright, 1936, by King Features Syndicate, Inc. International copyright and all other rights reserved.)

Childhood lasts longer in France than in America, and it is real childhood. Boys in their teens, writing letters, call their fathers cher petit pappa, "dear little papa." Imagine that from an American "prep" school.

Little French girls play innocently with Toto, their little dog, hardly knowing that such things as trance exist, when much older than Assistant Secretary Tugwell's intelligent young daughter, Marcia, aged twelve, who, in partnership with her friends, Mary Frances Cottrell and Joyce Helmick, organized "a laundry for washing dogs."

They advertised, "Small dogs, thirty cents; middle-sized dogs, thirty-five cents; groomed and washed. Dogs not good natured must be sent with muzzles, and we cannot wash large dogs."

Too bad that parental severity broke up the dog laundry. It had announced working hours, "Ten a. m. to five p. m. on Saturdays," the studious little girls' only holiday.

"All hours after school on other week days."

What a good example for government enterprises. The little girls really meant to WORK, to "groom and wash" the dogs, not merely stand around and collect the thirty cents.

Plucky little Holland and her wise Queen seem to have decided that the 1914 "war to end all wars" did not finish its job. Holland went through the big war safely, selling butter, cheese, eggs, not disturbed; not making any bad ten billion dollar loans.

Now Holland is buying thirteen heavy bombing planes in Baltimore, spending $1,500,000 for the thirteen and spending many other millions for other killing machinery.

Foreign countries read everything said about them in America, not that foreign countries care what Americans think, or attach importance to American opinion, as such; but America has money, raw products, and governments that are sometimes whimsical, changeable and boyish.

Europe, Asia and Africa watch, with equal interest, statements of Americans that count and more numerous Americans that float like feathers in the air.

One simple-minded Russian pointed with pride to the statement of a clergyman in our Union Theological Seminary.

That gentleman, the Rev. Charles C. Webber, has a plan for a better government, NOT based on the text about rendering unto Caesar that which is Caesar's. The big idea is to take away what is Caesar's.

Eight hundred young people were told by the Rev. Webber:

"God, who is not content with things as they are, is a revolutionary being, constantly seeking to make all things new."

The Rev. Webber, "recognizing this," about God being a revolutionist, has a plan to help God in his efforts; a plan as simple as A. B. C. Capitalism, he says, must be abolished. The Reverend Webber wants "a planned and planning social economy in the United States." Under the Charles C. Webber plan, people would own and manage such things as industry and property, no money would be spent for war, and youth would rule.

Reading the Reverend's sermon, you almost see

Youth on the prow, and Webber at the helm;
Regardless of the sweeping whirlwind's sway
That, hush'd in grim repose, expects his evening prey.

That "whirlwind expecting its evening prey" is capitalism, of course; what a time that grim thing will have when the Reverend Webber takes charge.

But, there is a BUT.

Has the Reverend looked into the Russian-Lenin-Stalin method? They were ahead of him, with the "abolish capitalism" idea. Has the Learned Webber informed himself concerning the Lenin-Stalin attitude toward religion and clergymen? It is not a friendly attitude.

Those brought up with the old-fashioned idea of God might ask Rev. Webber respectfully:

"If God really is a revolutionary, 'constantly seeking to make all things new,' why does He not carry out His will and 'make all things new' every few minutes? Can it be that He needs the help of the Rev. Webber? Lenin and Stalin got along without that help."

Also, arises this question: With capitalism abolished, who would build the churches, the Union Theological seminaries, and pay salaries to Reverend Webbers for reading the mind of the Divinity?

Dean Swift should have known the Rev. Webber when he wrote his tale of a tub.

'Uncle, Give Us Bread!'

BEGGARS ADD TO RED MISERY

Danish Writer Finds Money Valueless

Arne Strom is a Danish poultry expert who had lived in Canada and the United States. He was engaged by the Soviet Government to help improve its state farms.

Accompanied by his wife and child, Mr. Strom went to Soviet Russia imbued with a deep sympathy for the Communist experiment.

He spent a year off the beaten track, on a state collective farm, and traveling widely throughout the country.

Everywhere he went in Russia he heard the cry from a starving and miserable people, "Uncle, give us bread!" He returned to Denmark, utterly disillusioned.

With the pitiable cry of the tortured millions, "Uncle, Give Us Bread!" as the title, Mr. Strom has published the record of his experiences.

The book was translated from Danish and issued in England in the spring of 1936.

"Uncle, Give Us Bread!" is an unadorned and unique picture of life under the Soviet regime. It is suffused with a profound love for the helpless Russian people ground down by a merciless dictatorship.

The office of my chief was some way off and a taxi was not to be found. The trams were filled in the truest meaning of the word, for people were not only pressed together inside, but they hung in bunches on the steps and on the buffers and at each stop crowds of people were waiting. It had to be a long and tiring walk.

Although our smart guide was very charming and polite he impressed us as being very unfriendly and untrustworthy.

"Well, I suppose we'd better try to find you a room," he drawled lazily, while lighting a cigarette. "Now listen, if you were ready to pay for it in foreign money, it would be quite an easy matter; and I presume you've got no objection to doing that."

I answered at once that I had got no foreign money to waste on hotel rooms. We were in Russia now, and as far as I understood the Russian coinage was roubles and kopeks. Anyhow I was to be paid in that kind of money.

"Of course, of course," replied our friend, "we can quite easily get you a room for roubles, only it complicates the whole question very much."

This did not interest me at all, at least so I said. I only asked him to find us a room as quickly as possible.

"Do you want to have a look at Moscow?" he asked in an in-

PEABODY BONES REVEAL CHILD MURDER, BELIEF

POLICE SEEK MORE CLUES TO VICTIM

Peabody police were convinced today that they had a murder mystery to solve—probably the axe murder of a child.

Eight Peabody policemen, five city of Peabody foresters and two state detectives engaged in a search through the swampy section of South Peabody adjoining Brown's Pond for the rest of the skeleton, whose left leg bones were uncovered.

From measurements of the bones, now in possession of authorities, it was almost certain that a child of from 10 to 16 years had been the victim of violence, police said.

CHILD THEORY

The murder theory springs from the fact that the bones of a left foot and left leg from ankle to hip had been half-buried, apparently for a year. They were buried in a hollowed section of earth, then covered with boughs and pine leaves.

A portion of a pelvis bone, undoubtedly from the right side, doctors said, showed signs of having been severed violently—possibly by an axe. The bone fragment was broken in halves, raggedly chipped down its outside edge.

The theory that a child had been the victim sprung from the fact that the foot measurement from

Child Is Hit-and-Run Victim

(Picture from International News Photograph Service.)

Another kind of a hit-and-run person has been heard of. Little Noreen Fennell, just 6, was hit by a car. The driver halted just long enough to tell Noreen to "run along home." Parents took the child to the City Hospital for treatment and police are now looking for the heartless hit-and-run driver.

Little Noreen Fennell, 6, of 12 Carlisle street, Roxbury, was sore and lame today and she would like to find the hit-and-run driver who vanished last night after striking her, stopping his car and telling her to "run along home."

The girl was crossing Blue Hill avenue, Roxbury, when she was struck.

When she arrived home, crying, her parents notified police and she was taken to City Hospital for treatment.

Meanwhile, police are searching for the driver.

With General Emilio Mola's Rebel Army at Dobre Gordo, July 27 (By Courier to Hendaye, France)—Fascist forces won a bloody victory over loyal defenders to capture this mountain village today.

Fighting began at dawn when heavy government artillery began a terrific bombardment of 16,000 Fascist troops. The barrage continued for two hours when the Leftist infantry and rebel militia moved across a rock-strewn field to close-quarter fighting outside the village.

Officers estimated more than 100 were killed on both sides with 300 or 400 additional wounded.

About noon, two government planes from Madrid—both painted a flaming red—swooped down to machine gun the rebel columns which Gen. Emilio Mola, northern rebel commander, described as approximately 30 miles from Madrid. The general said he expected to march on the capital at "the end of the week."

The Liberal pilots tossed hand grenades from their ships but had marksmanship limited the casualties for the most part to artillery horses.

The rebels captured about 60 prisoners during the fighting.

Three of the Liberals, questioned by officers, asserted a Communist woman deputy known as "La Pasionaria," was the new minister of war in the Madrid government.

They declared they had had nothing to eat for three days and begged for food. "La Pasionaria" had issued orders, they declared, that all rebels taken

Judge S. R. Cutler, Of Chelsea Court, Ill Months, Dies

Judge Samuel R. Cutler, presiding justice of the Chelsea District Court, died just before noon today at the Chelsea Memorial Hospital.

Word was flashed to the Chelsea court just as the morning session had concluded. He had been ill for three months from cirrhosis of the liver.

Judge Cutler was born April 19, 1866, at Peterboro, N. H., and attended high school there. He prepared for Dartmouth at Tilton Academy, Ashburnham, and was graduated from the Hanover, N. H., college in 1889.

In 1892, he graduated from Boston University Law School and was admitted to the New Hampshire bar the same year. The following year he came to Boston and was admitted to the practice of law in this state.

Judge Cutler moved to Revere in 1894. Three years later he was appointed special justice of the Chelsea District Court, then known as the Police Court of Chelsea.

After 32 years as associate justice, he was appointed justice of the Chelsea Court to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Albert D. Bossom.

A year ago he gained national recognition when he fined the Western Union Telegraph Company $500 for contempt of court, later remitting the fine when the company officials apologized.

Surviving him are his widow, Mrs. Samuel R. Cutler, and a brother, Dr. Charles Cutler, of Peterboro, N. H. There were no children.

LANDON SPEEDS PLANS TO AID DROUTH VICTIMS

VANDENBERG, PINCHOT TALK WITH KANSAS GOVERNOR

By WILLIAM K. HUTCHINSON
International News Staff Correspondent

Topeka, Kas., July 28—Ignoring New Deal attacks on his labor record, Governor Alfred M. Landon today moved forward with his program for relief of drouth-stricken areas of Kansas, while awaiting conferences with two outspoken Republican critics of the Roosevelt administration.

The Governor's conferees will be Senator Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan and former Governor Gifford Pinchot of Pennsylvania.

Vandenberg assailed the New Deal for the past two years, concentrating his attack chiefly upon Agricultural Adjustment Administration benefit payments. Pinchot, after supporting Roosevelt in 1932, expressed his disgust with the New Deal and endorsed Landon.

Landon was to entertain Vandenberg at a luncheon conference with Senator Arthur Capper. Pinchot, accompanied by Mrs. Pinchot, will be a dinner guest.

HUNT WATER PUMPS

The Kansas drouth problem was relieved somewhat over night by heavy showers in many parts of the state. At the Governor's direction, meanwhile, state officials appealed to western railroads again for an emergency slash in rates on feed, cattle movements and water shipments.

They also canvassed the Midwest oil fields for water pumps to be transported into arid sections for aiding farmers in getting water from rivers and creeks.

A fresh survey of possible farm pond sites was inaugurated. Thus far 1100 individual ponds have been constructed on local farms through the state relief agency, though with federal funds.

They have furnished wide relief from water famine, while critical water shortages have developed only in sections where farmers failed to avail themselves of the chance to get the bonds. The entire program was sponsored by Landon two years ago.

CITE LABOR RECORD

Landon made it plain, meanwhile, he would not reply personally to such attacks as that delivered by George L. Berry, federal industrial co-ordinator. He will leave such political chores to his friends and Republican orators.

Defenders of the governor's labor record will have a wealth of material to prove his friendly to organized labor. First, he named George Binkely, for years president of the Kansas State Federation of Labor, as his state labor commissioner. Then, in messages to the Legislature, he twice recommended ratification of the child labor amendment, demanded a law modeled upon the federal statute to prevent abuse of injunctions in labor disputes and urged enactment of a prevailing wage law.

They can quote his 1935 message to the Legislature, in which he said:

"I urge the Legislature to give consideration to the ratification of the federal child-labor amendment. Kansas has no sweat shops and would not be materially affected by such legislation, but we should be willing to give support to any program for improving conditions for thousands of young boys and girls in the industrial states of the South and East. This is a part of our responsibility in the new social program.

RELIGIOUS STAND

"A former Kansas Legislature enacted a prevailing wage law, which has been declared unconstitutional by the State Supreme Court. Kansas labor needs the protection which such a wage law would provide and I recommend the enactment of a reasonable, valid and enforcable act.

"I urge your consideration of the enactment of a law similar to that now on Federal statute books to prevent any possible abuses in granting injunctions in labor disputes. Many measures will doubtless come before you regarding labor, and I urge that you give all such matters your most careful consideration."

The governor's friends were pleased with a tribute paid him by Louis L. Strauss, New York banker, Max Epstein, Chicago business man, and J. A. Harsfeld, Kansas City attorney, praising his religious tolerance. The trio issued a joint statement, declaring Landon was noted for a "deep hatred for all bigotry and injustice toward minority races and religions."

They added:

"His position in his business, social and political relations has always been one of liberal tolerance."

Knox Sees Big Sweep by G. O. P. in New England

Chicago, JnJly 28 (US)—"Fit as a fiddle," as he termed it, and ready for the gruelling stump campaign mapped out for him, Colonel Frank Knox, Republican vice-presidential nominee, has returned to Chicago from his New Hampshire summer home.

In his briefcase, Col. Knox carried the complete text of the speech of acceptance he will deliver at the notification ceremonies at Chicago stadium Thursday night.

Col. Knox was bubbling over with enthusiasm as to the G. O. P. outlook, particularly in the East. New England, he said, is set for an old time Republican victory that will sweep every state, adding:

"Conditions in New England are excellent. All these states are coming back to the Republican Party this fall. As for Maine, that state can be dismissed from further calculations as a certainty."

Pending draft of his tour itinerary, Knox will deliver at least four major addresses following the acceptance speech and before he embarks on the coast-to-coast swing. Besides addresses at Connersville, Indiana, on August 5, and Huntington, West Virginia, Aug. 13, when he will address state conventions, he is contemplating a stopover in Ohio for a meeting and will return to New Hampshire to speak at Hampton Beach on August 29.

He will deliver at least one address in Maine before the election, which falls on Sept. 14.

Oklahoma City, July 28 (AP)—Effect of the Townsend vote on the hotly contested race between Governor E. W. Marland and Rep. Josh Lee for the Democratic senatorial nomination was an important factor today as Oklahomans cast their votes in the runoff primary election.

Both Marland and Lee are strong supporters of the New Deal.

DAVENPORT O.K. SPLIT PARTY

The election of Senator William A. Davenport, Republican, of Greenfield, as chairman of the special recess commission on taxation and public expenditures, was today being discussed on Beacon Hill as the start of a split in Democratic ranks.

It is understood that the break is coming between Governor Curley and State Auditor Thomas H. Buckley, who was defeated for the position given Greenfield when six of the nine Democratic members of the commission voted against him. He received the votes of four Republican members.

Close friends of Auditor Buckley did not waste words today in stating that Democrats voted for Davenport only after they had been instructed to do so by Governor Curley. Auditor Buckley openly said he was disappointed in not being elected chairman.

Liner Rams Whale; Tows Body to Port

Seattle, July 28 (AP)—The fast coastwise liner H. F. Alexander caught a whale in the Pacific ocean and brought it 150 miles to Seattle. No one aboard knew about the whale until the steamer docked.

The whale was wedged across the ship's bow, just below the water line.

"I couldn't figure out what was down 'Puget Sound,' said Captain the matter with the ship coming Charles G. Hansen. "She wasn't performing right and there didn't seem to be anything particularly wrong.

"We were making 22 knots when the bow cut into the whale and probably killed it instantly. We thought we had hit a log.

"The force of the ship kept the whale hung on the bow. We did not discover it until we docked when the whale fell loose."

MAINE

Once again Republican candidates for the United States Senate and for governor were triumphant as the 14th day of the Boston Evening American-Boston Sunday Advertiser straw ballot ended.

Swinging back into Portland to sound out sentiment there again, the ballot collectors found that this time the city had given 124 votes to Senator Wallace H. White, Jr., Republican candidate for the Senate, as against only 84 for Governor Louis J. Brann, the Democrat.

At the same time, 129 straw ballot votes were cast for Lewis O. Barrows, Republican candidate for governor, in contrast to only 79 votes cast for his Democratic opponent, F. Harold Dubord.

With 14 days of the balloting gone, and with mail votes included, the test vote standing in Maine is:

For United States Senator

White	2421
Brann	1911

For Governor

Barrows	2001
Dubord	1437

Today the straw ballot car is in another section of Maine. Watch for it, and watch for the results, printed daily in the Evening American and on Sundays in the Sunday Advertiser.

MASSACHUSETTS

Opening up a still wider gap, Republican candidates again came out on top during the 14th day in the Boston Evening American-Boston Sunday ..dvertiser straw ballot in Massachusetts.

Both Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., Republican candidate for United States senator, and John W. Haigis, Republican candidate for governor, picked up the marbles during balloting in Melrose, Wakefield and Reading on this 14th day.

Trailing once more were Governor Curley, the Democratic aspirant for the Senate, and State Treasurer Charles F. Hurley, Democratic convention choice for governor.

Thus far the Massachusetts results in the straw ballot show:

For United States Senator:

Lodge	3814
Curley	1929

For Governor:

Haigis	3990
Hurley	1940

Today the straw ballot car is in Newburyport and vicinity, sounding out political sentiment in that region. Look for the car and cast your vote.

TOM BLANTON TRAILS IN VOTE

Abilene, Tex., July 28 (AP)—Thomas L. Blanton faced the fight of his political life today and blamed it on "insidious influence" and large sums of money "direct from Washington."

Blanton also cited: "The fight I have made against campaign finances from Moscow to Communize our school teachers."

For the first time in the 20 years he has served as Congressional Representative of the 17th district, the Abilene campaigner found himself trailing in an election.

On the basis of returns from the Texas election bureau, Blanton was running far behind Judge Clyde Garrett of Eastland, and will go into the primary run-off August 22. Garrett's lead last night, when the bureau closed was 22,613 to 18,196.

Lindbergh Lunches With Goering

Berlin, July 28 (AP)—Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh and General Hermann Wilhelm Goering, the dynamic force behind German aviation, met at the luncheon table today.

The air minister returned to Berlin only this morning and immediately invited Colonel and Mrs. Lindbergh to his home in the center of the city.

The Lindberghs had not previously met General Goering, although it was he who invited them to the country.

This morning, storms across Germany forced Colonel Lindbergh to land today at Mardeburg while en route to Dessau to visit the famous Junkers plant.

Workman Killed By Falling Bricks

Trapped under a shower of bricks while at work, Richard King, 48, of 152 Grove street, Chelsea, died instantly today.

With other employes of a wrecking company, King was pulling down a wall at the Heywood-Wakefield Company plant in Wakefield. King was trapped beneath the debris when a wall fell.

MURPHY PLANS TO 'TORPEDO' DEAL FOES

Detroit, July 28 (INS)—Michigan Democrats today laid plans to "torpedo" possible efforts of the anti-Roosevelt rally of National Constitutional" Democrats here August 7, charging the constitutional conference comprised a political plot to "embarrass" the President and scuttle the candidacy of Frank Murphy for the governorship of Michigan.

Murphy, close friend of the President and high commissioner of the Philippines, was drafted to run for Governor of Michigan by national administration advisers in the apparent belief it would strengthen the Roosevelt vote in this usually rock-ribbed Republican state.

ELY INVITED

Today, Murphy and other party leaders here refused to believe that it was a "casual accident" or geographical advantage which led Sterling E. Edmunds, St. Louis Democrat, to choose Detroit for the meeting place when he sent out invitations to "Constitutional Democrats" for the anti-Roosevelt conference.

Invitations, it was understood, were sent to Al Smith, who "took a walk" from the Democratic Party, Former Governor Joseph B. Ely of Massachusetts, and Bainbridge Colby, former Secretary of State from New York. Former Senator Jim Reed of Missouri was declared to be the joint sponsor of the coming conference planned by Edmunds.

They were among the signers of the manifesto urging the Democratic National Convention to repudiate President Roosevelt.

PLANS "TORPEDO"

Edmunds and Reed now are both at their summer homes in Michigan. They were accused by Murphy of picking Detroit for their conference because of the recent return of the High Commissioner from the Philippines to run for Governor. Defeat of Murphy in the September primary at the November election would comprise a heavy blow to Roosevelt hopes.

"Their reason for coming to Detroit is obvious," Murphy commented. "They are coming here to manipulate things in the hope of damaging or embarrassing the President. We took care of their last effort when they sent a letter to the National Convention.

"We'll be prepared to torpedo them again."

REPORTS STILL MAKE HURLEY CANDIDATE

By BERNARD J. DOHERTY

Reports that Francis X. Hurley, of Cambridge, former state auditor and at present member of the state board of tax appeals, may seek the Democratic nomination for Governor are being revived on Beacon Hill.

Hurley, when seen today, however, declined to discuss the matter other than to say that there might be some developments later in the week.

The former state auditor is a constitutionalist Democrat, holding much the same views as former Governor Joseph B. Ely.

In the event the former state auditor decides to throw his hat into the ring, the gubernatorial situation would present a confusing problem to the party voters, with State Treasurer Charles F. Hurley as the convention nominee and Lieutenant Governor Joseph L. Hurley hovering on the sidelines as a possible third candidate.

HAIGIS BIRTHDAY

John W. Haigis of Greenfield Republican convention nominee for governor, will celebrate his 56th birthday next Friday quietly with his family. He plans to journey with his two daughters, Rose Margaret and Elisabeth, his brother, Fred, and Mrs. Swilley of Somerville, a sister, to Bradford, N. H., there to picnic with his son, a junior counsellor at a boys' camp.

The G. O. P. gubernatorial nominee will start actively campaigning early in August.

Chairman Joseph McGrath of the Democratic state committee is expected back in Boston today from a trip to Washington.

LAY PLANS

McGrath went to Washington to map out campaign plans in a conference with Chairman James A. Farley of the national committee. Before leaving, the state chairman said that the interview had been suggested by himself and that Farley had not sent for him.

Governor Curley, it is learned, has chosen the members of his Curley-for-Governor campaign committee. The committee will be headed by former Chairman Charles H. McGlue of the state committee.

McGlue is known as one of the ablest organizers within the party in this state, has had charge of the last two Curley campaigns.

MURDER IS SEEN IN BONES FIND

toe to heel was only eight inches, from ankle to knee, only nine inches, and from knee to hip, only eleven inches.

Medical authorities felt that a woman of very slight stature might have satisfied these measurements. But they didn't place much credence in that.

One of the baffling features was that a Lynn newspaper, dated February 16, 1936, was uncovered close to the spot where the leg bones were found.

Officials were almost certain that whoever had concealed the gruesome traces of a crime must have done so at least a year ago, probably longer. Naturally the newspaper date is inconsistent.

SENT TO BOSTON

The bones were sent to Boston late today to be examined by Dr. William H. Waters, associate medical examiner.

None of them was broken, but the little toe was missing. There were indications that the limb had been severed by an axe.

Because of the evident indications of murder, District Attorney Hugh A. Cregg of Essex county dispatched to the scene State Detectives William Murray and Richard Griffin. They joined forces with Chief of Police Edward F. Pierce.

MAY SEARCH POND

Should the search of the swamplands near Brown's Pond fail to uncover the remainder of the skeleton, the pond itself will be searched with grappling irons.

A woman's shoe, size 4 or 5, and a decayed bed quilt were also picked up near the spot where the bones were found. How these tie in, if they do, police are not prepared to say.

Wendel Death Threat Reported

Newark, N. J., July 28 (AP)—With a federal grand jury investigation of the Paul H. Wendel kidnaping case in recess until tomorrow, the Newark News says Wendel's life has been threatened since his appearance before the jury.

The threat, the News says, was made after the former Trenton lawyer spent several hours before the jury investigating his story he was abducted and tortured into making a false confession to the Lindbergh kidnaping.

Race Pickpockets

Victimizing of six men by pickpockets at Suffolk Downs and at the Revere dog track within the past few days leads police to believe that a well organized gang, probably from New York, is at work at the two racing plants.

Today's Boon-Doggle

For the tird time in the past six years a disastrous drouth has visited the Middle West and to alleviate distress in this area the Works Progress Administration must now put 85,000 more men on its work-relief rolls, digging wells, building dams, creating artificial lakes and constructing farm-to-market roads over which the farmers now have nothing to take to market.

"The need of this program," declares Aubrey Williams, deputy Works Progress Administrator, "was anticipated as a result of studies conducted by our research division covering successive drouths of recent years. Foresight based on these studies enables us to meet the situation expeditiously."

All of which sounds particularly strange to those in Washington who are familiar with Works Progress Administration activities. True foresight, it would seem, should have placed the Works Progress Administration to spend a considerable portion of its huge boon-doggling fund on water conservation projects and upon flood-prevention work, the need for which was so tragically demonstrated in many sections of the country last spring.

Yet Administrator Harry Hopkins' own statement to a Congressional committee at the end of the first year of Works Progress Administration activity discloses these amazing facts:

At that time the Works Progress Administration had selected for operation only $62,000,000 worth of flood control and conservation projects of all kinds.

It was spending two and one-half times that sum in the construction and improvement of parks, playgrounds, athletic fields, swimming pools, race tracks and other recreational facilities; and out of the $1,400,000,000 it had to spend $1,338,000,000 would still be left for other work when all its water conservation and flood-control projects had been paid for.

TALLEST Boy Abhors HEAT

18 YEARS OLD HE'S 8 FT., 5 IN.

Alton, Ill., July 28 (AP)—Eighteen-year-old Robert Wadlow, the tallest human of which the world has authoritative record, lolled in front of an electric fan today and complained of the heat.

He was by no means the only person aggravated by the long hot spell but the extreme high temperatures have made it a strenuous summer. And he refuses to budge from in front of the fan except for an occasional swim. For further comfort he kicks off his $86 shoes—size 39.

The Wadlow family yard stick says Robert measures 8 feet 5 inches tall, which would make him the tallest person in medical history. He weighs 425 pounds, having grown slightly more than one inch since his 18th birthday last February and gained 35 pounds.

Mythology and legend tell of giants as tall as 11 feet, but the largest human ever accepted by medical science is Charles Byrne, the eighteenth century "Irish giant." He measured a fraction over 8 feet 4 inches.

Spurns Theaters

Wadlow has an overactive pituitary gland, pea-sized organ at the base of the brain which controls growth. His parents and four brothers and sisters are normal.

The giant youth swims well despite his bulk.

He said he may enroll in some other school next fall rather than return to his pre-law course at local Shurtleff College. He was a better than average student there during the second semester after high school graduation at mid-year.

Bob has received many attractive theatrical offers, some of them from Europe, but so far has declined, even though his father makes but a modest living as an oil company engineer. He and his father plan to go to Sedalia, Mo., in August to run a refreshment stand at the state fair.

Those Technically Minded Quins Are Building Castles Now!

MARIE EMILIE YVONNE

"All that goes up . . . !"—That would-be castle the Quins were building is now leaning—and leaning plenty. Emilie makes one last effort to stop the collapse, but Marie, realizing the futility of it all, claps her hands to her face in a despairing gesture. Yvonne seems to have an I-told-you-so expression on her pretty face. But these ladies don't give in very easily. The job of reconstruction will begin shortly, and you can take it from them the next castle won't fall.

MARIE ANNETTE CECILE EMILIE YVONNE

Castles in the air!—Clad in workingmen's attire, overalls and all, the famous "Gold Dust Quins" are determined to live up to their name. They're building a castle. What with all their gold they could have several castles built for them. But they want their castle built their own way—and woe to the man or woman who offers any suggestions. Marie, Annette, Cecile and Emilie are right down to business. Castle Builder Yvonne seems to be sneaking away from her duties. Perhaps she heard a dinner whistle! Whatever the case, she's making sure that her hard-working sisters don't catch her.

This Film Boner Nipped in Bud

Hollywood, July 28 (AP)—The boner hunters, fans who scan each new picture for technical mistakes, lost an opportunity today.

A unit filming "Girl of the Jungle" returned from location in the Malibu mountains and repaired to the projection room to view the latest scenes.

Presently the screen showed Dorothy Lamour as she reared in a primeval arbor, where civilization, according to the script, had never been.

The screen, however, framed a big tree beside which Miss Lamour was standing and on which, carved by a jack knife, were the initials "H. C. L."

Because jungle trees aren't usually carved with initials, the scene was ordered retaken.

Elopers on Bench; Police Unromantic

Miss Fanny Knapp, 18, of Cooperstown, N. Y., and Lawrence Hall, 22, of a CCC camp near Cooperstown, were watching the dawn from a bench in Merrymount Park, Quincy, today, when accosted by a policeman lacking an artistic appreciation of daybreak as viewed by romantic youth.

At the police station, where the pair had breakfast, it developed that they left New York Sunday night, hitch-hiking an elopement, and that they intended to get married.

From Boston they went to Quincy seeking friends of Hall, but they arrived at such an early hour that they decided to mark time in the park before making the social visit. Police inquiries were directed to Cooperstown.

Pleads Not Guilty In Shotgun Slaying

Charged with the murder of Fritz B. Nelson, 65, with a 12-gauge shotgun, John W. Skoog, 68, of Davis road, West Bedford, pleaded not guilty in Concord district court today, and was held without bail for a hearing, July 31.

Skoog is alleged to have killed Nelson, a roomer in his home, during a quarrel over a bottle of whiskey. Skoog went to his daughter's home nearby and instructed her to call the police.

ROOSEVELT AID ASKED ON BONUS

The President's aid in collecting his long delayed bonus bonds was sought today by Harold Moulton Hunt, Brookline veteran of overseas service.

Hunt, married, now unemployed and father of two children, this afternoon sent an air mail, special delivery letter addressed to President Roosevelt at the White House frankly setting forth his case.

"I am the 'forgotten man' of your many speeches," he writes. "I applied for my bonus early in the year, waited expectantly on the 15th day of June—but no bonds.

"Finally, I wrote Senator Gibson, whom I know personally. (Senator Gibson is of Vermont, of which state Hunt is a native.

"After taking the case up with the Veterans Administration, they sent me a change of address form 1709 with the assurance that when this was duly executed my case would receive prompt attention.

"This form was executed and mailed air mail, special delivery on June 25. I have received no further word from them and although I have written several times continue to receive no reply.

"I have always been of the opinion that the Veterans Administration was organized for the veterans' benefit, and to handle just such cases as mine. They have not even accorded me the courtesy of a reply.

"Probably I'm only one case in a million, and as such will receive no consideration, but I felt that I had to unburden my mind at what I consider unfair treatment.

"I am married, have two children, am out of work, in extremely destitute circumstances, and at my wit's end. Appeal to you, Mr. President, as a last resort. If your staff can expedite payment of my bonus bonds you will earn my undying gratitude."

Sherman Lawyers Seek Court Stay

Worcester, July 28—Lawyers for Newell P. Sherman, American tragedy slayer, conferred here today seeking a means to avert the electrocution of the former Sutton choir singer, ordered by the court for next week.

The conference took place in the office of William W. Buckley, who cut short a vacation stay at Falmouth to discuss possibilities with J. Fred Humes.

The expected action in the Supreme Court at Washington has not been taken. A report given circulation during the conference today was that a court order for delay may be sought from Judge Thomas J. Hammond, trial justice, on grounds of newly discovered evidence.

Sherman, in the death house of the State Prison in Charlestown, was reported "sitting and reading," apparently unperturbed.

WPA Accountants Quit City Hall

Because funds had been exhausted, 27 Works Progress Administration accountants employed at City Hall failed to appear at work today.

They had been informed the project had been forced to be discontinued.

MANY FRIENDS PAY HAMBLIN TRIBUTE

Prayer, music and the thunder of aeplane motors merged today in a requiem of farewell and last tribute to George W. Hamblin.

The Boston Evening American reporter whose death at the age of 29, in Provincetown Saturday, cast a pall of gloom over the profession he so ably represented, was buried in St. Joseph's Cemetery, West Roxbury.

The earth he loved enfolded him and above the earth, in the air courses he so often rode, six planes from the Boston airport, piloted by his mourning friends, roared down over the grave in a stirring gesture that was both "Hail and Farewell."

RECALLS SMITH TRIBUTE

It was but five short months ago that Hamblin himself, in the cockpit of one of those planes, paid the final tribute to a beloved comrade, James J. Smith, under similar circumstances, and wrote of it in a brilliant story—"Flying for Jim Smith"

The funeral was held from his home, 26 Lynde street, West End, with a solemn high mass of requiem, celebrated by the Rev. Robert C. Hilton, in St. Joseph's Church, Chambers street.

A host of friends in the newspaper profession, in aviation, which was his avocation, and in public life, were in attendance.

Mrs. Catherine Cuddy Walsh was the organist, Mrs. Helen Galvin the soloist.

Pallbearers were all members of the staff of his paper: John H. Noonan, executive city editor; Paul Whelton, rewrite man; Frank McLean, police reporter; John W. English, State House representative; Gus Williams, staff photographer, and George Grimm, promotion manager.

Ushers were Caspar Dorfman of the American, Jerry Delaney and William McDevitt, both of the Record.

Acting Mayor John I. Fitzgerald headed the public officials. Other newspapermen present included Bernard J. Doherty, Frank Reilly and William Michaelfelder of the American; John Donovan, James Neary, Tom Grant and Joe Blake of the Globe, Frank Kinselin of the Post; Fred Brine of the Herald, and James A. Kelley and Tommy Tomlinson of the Traveler.

Others present were Ormsby Court, Record; Robert McCormack, American; Fred Hoey, radio's baseball broadcaster; Robert Bernson, Lincoln aviator; Margaret Downey of the Advertiser; Al Watts of the Traveler; Arthur Hughes of the American.

Garrett J. Wall, funeral director, read prayers at the grave.

6 PILOTS PAY HONOR

William Prendible, clerk of the Suffolk Superior court, Hamblin's assignment beat, led a group of court officials.

Three National Guard planes and three commercial ships were in the formation that flew over the grave.

Heading the National Guard flight was Captain Albert L. Edson, airport superintendent and a close friend of Hamblin. The other guard planes were piloted by First Lieutenant Charles I. Emerson and Second Lieutenant Melvin L. Hollidge.

Danny Dugan, Johnny Shobe and Douglas McOdrum piloted the flight of civilian ships.

The planes dipped their wings, the guard planes power-dived in formation.

Hamblin had been a member of the American staff since 1929, first as a member of the Cambridge Edition staff. Later as a reporter on general assignment he covered Boston Airport activities, the waterfront, the courthouse and the state house, and took a hand at rewriting. He was both a skilled reporter and writer.

Aviation was his principle outside interest and he flew often as pilot or observer, many of his flights being on news stories, many just for the joy of flying.

He is survived by his mother, Mrs. Margaret Hamblin and a sister, Miss Lillian Hamblin, with both of whom he lived, and four other sisters. Mrs. Ralph Becker of New York, Mrs. Joseph De Souza of Medway, Mrs. Robin Hazleton of California and Sister Francis Xavier of the Order of Notre Dame, who is a teacher in a Lowell parochial school.

U. S. Dope Farm Contract Awarded

Washington, July 28 (US)—After a year's delay, the Treasury awarded a $1,066,700 contract for erection of principal buildings for the Federal Narcotic Farm at Forth Worth, Texas.

The award was made to E. L. Martin of Dallas, lowest of six bidders.

The contract calls for an administration building, a clinical ward, a custody ward accommodating 1000 persons and a nurses' home.

Student Fined For Short Lobsters

Because he caught and held 13 lobsters which were about one-eighth of an inch shorter than the legal length, Thomas J. Bongiorno, 19, law student and lobster fisherman, of Nahant road, Nahant, was today fined $65 by Judge Ralph W. Reeve in Lynn court today.

The fisherman-student appealed.

He told the court he didn't have his rule with him when he caught them and was simply holding them until he could measure them. He was brought into court by Edward Frail, Lynn game warden.

Family and Mates Say Farewell to Writer

National Guard and civilian planes droned overhead as the body of George Hamblin, flier, aviation expert and member of the rewrite staff of the Boston Evening American, was lowered into the grave today at St. Joseph's Cemetery, West Roxbury. Left to right are: Joseph DeSouza, a brother-in-law; Mrs. DeSouza, a sister; an uncle; Mrs. Margaret Hamblin, mother; Miss Lillian Hamblin, sister; Joseph DeSouza, Jr.; Jack English of the American; Bob Court of the Record; Frank McLean, American; John H. LOCKED DOOR NEW MYSTERY IN CO-ED DEATH

Asheville, N. C., July 28 (AP)—A hotel chambermaid's chart slipping the door to Helen Clevenger's room was locked from the inside ten minutes before her mutilated body was found threw the mysterious murder case open to further questions today.

The court, officers said, disclosed the door was locked at 8:30 a. m. on July 18, slightly more than seven hours after the New York University sophomore was assaulted and shot.

The announcement raised these points:

If Miss Clevenger's room was locked from the inside, as the chart indicated, was the murderer in there at 8:20?

Was he there from 1 a. m., when several guests at the fashionable hotel heard a woman's agonized scream, until 8:20?

Or was the murderer a man whom a bellboy saw scurrying from the mezzanine to the outside into a thunderstorm at 1 a. m.?

If this shadowy form, the so-called "mystery man" of the case, was the murderer, did he return to the girl's room later to destroy clues he left behind?

The girl's uncle, Professor W. L. Clevenger, said at the coroner's inquest that when he went to his niece's room at 8:30 a. m. and found her body, the door was not locked.

The sheriff's office, to whom the crime was reported at 10 a. m., said a "super-master" passkey was found in the lock on the outside of the door.

Hotel officials reported there were only 11 such keys, issued only to authorized employes, yet Sheriff Laurence E. Brown said a check showed the key in the girl's room made 12.

Old-Fashioned Sniff Failing, Detector Finds Bootleg Rum

Glass Tube Does Trick

TESTER KEEPS RETAILERS HONEST

Equipped with newly-invented detectors of bootleg liquor, federal agents of the Alcoholic Tax Unit has launched a scientific drive against saloon and tavern keepers in New England who sell fake whiskey, mulcting the government of millions of dollars in taxes annually, it was learned today.

This detector, invented by John William Sterl, former revenue bureau chemist, consists of a small tube, an enlarged eye dropper and a small bottle of chemical which separates the coloring, aids in giving the alcoholic contents per volume as well as detecting water or foreign substance.

TRAPS THOUSANDS

The detector, known as the Williams Test Sets, has trapped thousands of saloon and tavern keepers throughout the United States during the past year.

The sets are used by every inspector affiliated with the Alcohol Tax Unit, Bureau of Internal Revenue. These inspectors are making visits to all dispensers of whiskies, whether sold in bottle or by the drink.

At each inspection the contents of every bottle on the bar where the seal has been broken, is tested. In this manner the revenue agent can decide whether the bottle has been refilled.

PREFER CHARGES

In the event he finds indicative evidence of a refill, the bottle is then sent to the general laboratory for further tests. After this has been completed the bartender and tavern owner are arrested on charges of having inferior whisky or illicit whisky in their possession.

"By continual inspection we have successfully stamped out practically all inferior whiskies throughout the New England district," Sidney Sherwood, supervisor of the local unit said.

"Our inspectors drop in on taverns and bars day and night. A complete check is made and questionable samples are immediately submitted to the bureau. Before we installed this inspection system considerable poison whisky and inferior grades appeared in bottles of recognized bonded liquors," Mr. Sherwood said.

4000 YEARLY TESTS

"Our jobs are running about 4000 tests per year and in each one of these instances we usually find some evidence of a refill. However, we do not always make an arrest for in some instances the tavern owner purchased the liquor in good faith.

"We then concentrate our forces in an effort to find the source and manufacturer of the counterfeit. We have been successful in most cases and have captured the men behind this type of racket," Sherwood concluded.

The set is carried in the pocket of revenue agents, and tests are made in presence of tavern owners and their patrons.

Cooling Rains Fall In Drouth Area

Chicago, July 28 (AP)—Scattered showers brought wide-spread relief to the heat-harrassed Midwest today.

Rain—too light to break the crop-killing drouth in most areas, but substantial in others—fell in parts of the lower Missouri, middle Mississippi and Ohio valleys, Colorado, Oklahoma, Nebraska and western South Dakota.

Fresh participation was indicated for today in the southern sections of Illinois, Indiana, Missouri and Kansas, and for tomorrow in parts of the arid Dakotas and western Minnesota.

Ohio thunderstorms routed one hot wave, as three persons were killed by lightning.

Cooler weather spread over most of Kansas, Nebraska, Ohio and Iowa and the northern portions of Missouri, Illinois and Indiana.

Girl Identifies Bedroom Intruder

Lawrence, July 28—Charges of attack are to be placed against Anthony Masai, 28, of Park street, police said here today, after he had been identified by a 17-year-old girl as the man who allegedly attempted to attack her in the bedroom of her home on June 4.

The girl is Alice Pare, of West street, and police said her mother corroborated her daughter's identification. The mother ran into the room when she heard her daughter scream and was struck on the jaw.

Straus Supports Landon's Fight

New York, July 28 (US)—Roger W. Straus, a leader in activities for inter-faith harmony, and vice-president of the American Smelting and Refining Company, has declared his support of Governor Alfred M. Landon in the Presidential race, it was announced today.

Rockefeller Favors Low Liquor Tax

New York, July 28 (US)—High taxes on liquor are a boon to bootleggers, in the opinion of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who arrived on the Queen Mary after five weeks in France where he was decorated by the French government. In an interview on board the ship Rockefeller said:

"I changed my entire position on prohibition after I realized that the era had bred most of the crime and racketeering in the country.

"But I believe that the benefits of repeal are not complete because of the action of some of the states in placing high taxes on legitimate liquor. It still leaves room for the bootlegger."

Rockefeller has been visiting Versailles, France, where he spent $2,400,000 for the restorction of the old palace of Marie Antoinette and its surrounding buildings and gardens.

He also restored the Rheims cathedral, damaged in the war. For this he received a decoration.

Rockefeller was asked what he thought of J. P. Morgan's prediction that 30 years of the present rate of taxation in this country would dissipate America's large fortunes. He said:

"I think he gives them a long while. But, of course I know nothing about that."

He refused to comment upon the forthcoming election and said that he was amazed at the prosperity everywhere in England, saying:

"I have not seen such activity since before the depression."

Murder Charge Against Man 68

John L. Skoog, 68, of Davis road, West Bedford, was arraigned in the local district court today charged with murder.

Police said Skoog admitted holding the weapon which exploded and killed Fritz B. Nelson, 60, a retired machinist. The shot was fired from a 12-gauge shot gun and struck Nelson in the neck.

Both men are alleged to have started an argument involving a quart of liquor. Nelson had been a roomer at Skoog's house and, according to Skoog, had come home with the liquor in an alleged intoxicated condition.

Skoog told police he tried to take the liquor away from Nelson but had become frightened when the roomer started to attack him.

Skoog continued and allegedly told police he grabbed the shotgun. A tussle between the two men then allegedly followed during which the shotgun exploded.

Beggars Abound in Russia Under Communist Regime

gratiating voice. "It would only cost a small sum in foreign money."

I was getting angry at all this talk about foreign currency and asked him to what part of the country we were going. He thought we had better leave that question alone for the time being, and begin by finding a room in a hotel.

A Buick could be put at our disposal at $15 a day. Evidently I said not expressed myself clearly enough. No, I snarled crossly, wondering at the same time whether it were wise to use that tone towards this high Bolshevik, we had no foreign money, and we had no wish to rush about the streets of Moscow in a car oftener than was strictly necessary; for so we should see nothing that was worth seeing.

Anger Best

Would he please arrange for our departure from Moscow as soon as possible. It had already cost us a tidy sum in foreign money to reach the Soviet Union, and none of those who had engaged me had told me that the rouble was practically worthless.

Again I realized with surprise that anger seems the best means of getting anything done in Russia.

He asked me whether I had any special wish as to what part of the country we should live in.

"I want to be where I can be of real use," I declared. With an enigmatic smile he murmured that that applied to all Russia. The state trust which had engaged me had enormous poultry farms in all parts of the country. How should we like to go to Povorino?

"How big is the poultry farm there?" I asked.

It was a completely modern poultry farm, with about 30,000 fowls and an enormous number of chickens. He did not know their exact number, but—here he looked at me with a surprisingly stupid expression in his eyes—it was every bit as large as an American poultry farm.

"And what will my job be like? Are there any special circumstances at this poultry farm that need improving?"

Oh, yes, there were a good many, he thought, and especially the egg-laying ought to be improved. Last year's return had only been 46 eggs for each fowl and the mortality had been terribly high.

A small thick-set, red-haired man with only one arm now entered the room. This little man, to whom we were now entrusted, had learned his dreadful German in a prison camp during the Great War. He told us we were to drive in our hotel in the motor-car belonging to the trust, and asked us where we had left our hand luggage.

An overwhelmingly gorgeous room at the "Grand Hotel" was put at our disposal, and the red-haired man handed me a bundle of notes for present expenses.

Soon after his departure we consumed a very odd dinner in the magnificent restaurant of the hotel, A vegetable soup made with sour cream, a piece of bad fish, a small piece of cake—and a bill for nearly 20 roubles. I fully realized that our meals only in this hotel would cost us at least 100 roubles a day.

In the evening, our boy being asleep, my wife and I went for a walk in the strange town. During our walk we were constantly being worried by beggars. This surprised us, for before leaving Denmark we had heard a lecture delivered by a famous Danish author—a Communist, it is true, but that was no reason, we thought, why he should not tell the truth—in which he gave a glowing description of Soviet Russia and mentioned that he had seen no sign of poverty in the streets of Moscow.

Living Scarecrows

What a pity he was not with us now for us to show him the most terrible living scarecrows one could think of.

As we came nearer to our hotel the beggars disappeared, for it was situated in one of the better parts of the town, whose streets had evidently been "cleansed" of such as they. The beggars had evidently known us for foreigners, so they did not use many words, but only used that gesture we already knew so well of carrying their fingers up to their own mouths. Some of them looked so terrible that we were quite frightened.

2 Strangers, Game, All His Cash Goes

Idorie Boise, 44, of Montreal, arrived at the North Station early today with his wife. In his pockets he carried their vacation money.

Soon after his wife admired the wide sweep of marble concourse in the station two strangers approached and struck up a lively conversation. Soon Boise found himself matching pennies and wits with the two men.

Within a half hour the Canadian visitor had dropped $45, all his cash, and the two "official greeters" had vanished.

Boise, tearfully told his story to Sergeant John McFarland of the North street police station and borrowed enough money to wire home for some ready cash.

Storms Shorten Lindy's Air Trip

Berlin, July 28 (AP)—Storms over Germany forced Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh to land today at Magdeburg while en route to Dessau to visit the famous Junkers plant.

The Colonel left Berlin at 8 a. m., but landed at Magdeburg and later returned to the capital.

In Bavaria the storm was the worst in many years, with several million marks damage to crops and buildings from hail, wind and rain.

Mickey, 5, Puffs Birthday Cigar

Weed Real Treat

CHARLES "MICKEY" NORMAN, JR.

Butt Bought for Baby

Patterson, N. J., July 28 (AP)—Charles (Mickey) Norman, 3rd, ushered in his fifth birthday today with a man-sized puff of cigar smoke.

It didn't look as if there would be much of a party, but Mickey didn't care. He took solace in the weed.

A trip to a movie had been half-promised as a birthday treat, and Mickey was hoping he could sit upstairs where smoking is allowed. He has smoked since he was 14 months old.

Mickey has developed a remarkable talent as a detective, his father said. He can trace hidden cigars.

If the father hides his cigars in a box on a shelf and says he has none when the boy asks for one, Mickey replies:

"Oh, yes. I know you've got some up there in that box."

A medium-sized cigar of extra quality was on the gift list for Mickey today.

Except for the measles, Mickey has never been sick, his father said. Colds are entirely strange to him.

Betty Alden on Beacon Hill

Hallam Movius, Jr. to Take Bride in London Ceremony

By BETTY ALDEN

THERE MUST BE something romantic about digging in the ruins of ancient dwellings of mankind . . . at least, Boston girls have learned to take it for granted that the men who go off on European archaeological expeditions are definitely off their list, for they most always bring back a bride . . .

Of course, the men go primarily to dig for historic and scientific items and not for brides, but archaeology is such a romantic business, fraught with legends and fables of ancient kings and forgotten ages, that it is only natural that when evening comes and picks and shovels are laid aside, the boys should carry their romantic thoughts to the parties given in their honor by the local gentry . . .

FAITH CHIPMAN

Some time ago Amory Goddard returned from one of the Harvard Archaeological expeditions to Ireland engaged to an Irish beauty, who very soon after became his second wife . . . and later Hugh O'Neill Hencken, leader of the expedition, followed suit in picking the second Mrs. Hencken . . .

Hallam Movius, Jr., another member of the group which has made frequent excursions to Ireland to excavate, did not confine his search for romance to the Emerald Isle, but met his bride-to-be, an Australian girl, who was doing graduate work at Cambridge University, at a party in London . . .

This year on his return trip to the expedition's diggings in Ireland, he made a detour by way of Australia to visit his fiancee, Nancy Champion de Crespigny, and her family in Adelaide, to make plans for their wedding . . .

The final date is not quite certain yet, but it will be some time in the middle of September in London . . . Hallam's mother, Mrs. A. L. West Movius of Beacon street, is planning to sail from here on August 14 so she can join him in time to help with the preparations for the wedding . . .

The bride-to-be is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Champion de Crespigny, and she has a number of relatives in England, including Sir Claude Raoul de Crespigny of London and Flight Commander Vivian de Crespigny of the Royal Air Force . . .

When Hallam is not digging he is an instructor of anthropology at Harvard, so Bostonians will have the pleasure of welcoming his bride into their midst some time this autumn . . . They may live in Cambridge, where they will be near his work and his clubs at Harvard, which include Hasty Pudding, D. K. E. Institute of 1770 and the Harvard Travelers Club . . .

Marblehead Prepares for Regatta

YACHTSMEN ARE NATURALLY busy people . . . Many of them get a lot more fun out of painting and scraping and doing any number of little chores around their boats than actually sailing them, but this week is the boat putterers' carnival, for everything must be in shipshape order for the annual Marblehead regatta which begins Saturday . . .

Underbodies on everything from the smallest Brutal Beast to the largest schooner yacht have been shined as smooth as glass and every shroud has been tightened so it will twang like a "G" string to the reverberations of the starting gun on Saturday morning . . .

The annual race week regatta is such a large affair that the three largest yacht clubs co-operate in managing it . . . The Eastern will have charge of the first three days, Saturday, Monday and Tuesday . . . Evidently Sunday is to be a day of rest and fervent prayers for good racing weather . . . The Boston Yacht Club will direct the races Wednesday and the Corinthian will assume charge of the concluding series on Thursday, Friday and Saturday . . .

Members of the Eastern and Corinthian have placed many special trophies for the winners of the various classes, but the Lipton cup for 30 square meters class is still one of the most coveted trophies of the entire series . . .

According to its usual custom the Eastern is also staging its annual tennis tournament during race week . . . and as an innovation, will give worthwhile and useful prizes instead of the usual decorative but impractical silver cups . . . During the next few days all the younger members may be found in secluded spots behind barns and other buildings as they bang the ball against the wall, practising the whole routine of forehand and backhand drives, quick volleys and crafty chop strokes . . .

It is a bit early to know exactly who will be entered, but those who have actually signed up for the women's singles include Jane Bogardus, Eleanor Claflin, Barbara Hollingsworth, Helen Shepard and Frannie Seaver . . . Paul Rust, Jr., Parker Jones and Gerald Fox are sure to be among the contestants in the men's singles . . . "Raymie" Donovan, the tennis pro at the club, is directing the tournament . . .

Faith Chipman in Rockport Art Colony

LEAVES FROM OUR NOTEBOOK . . . Ellen de Normandie, daughter of the Robert de Normandies of Pine Hill, Lincoln, is enlivening her mid-summer program with a visit up in Yarmouth, Maine, with her friend Elizabeth Thomas . . . Faith Chipman, one of the girls who goes over Beacon Hill to business every morning, spent her two weeks vacation brushing up on her landscape painting at one of Rockport's little art centers . . . All was not oils and canvas however, for at least two evenings of her vacation we saw her enjoying herself at the Casino, over in Magnolia . . . Faith is the daughter of Mrs. Reeves Chipman, president of the Women's City Club . . . Her sister Mary is going to be married to Edmund Keville sometime in September and though she has not divulged the date yet some of her friends have already given her showers . . . She is a member of the Junior League and her fiance, son of Colonel and Mrs. William J. Keville of Belmont, is a graduate of Harvard with the class of 1933 . . . Speaking of weddings, there is to be one in Cohasset on the 8th of August when Peggy Little plights her troth to Dr. Augustus Thornton Scott . . .

Fall for You!

Gowns To Greet Chilly Weather

Miss Evelyn Hassman, above, was one of the four attractive young socialites who was to model at the Fashion Congress session in the Ritz-Carlton Hotel today. A pre-view of fall clothes caused stimulating discussion between mothers and daughters invited to act as judges.

FASHION FOLK PICK STYLES FOR AUTUMN

Just what milady will wear when crisp Fall breezes begin to tumble the leaves, their colors, accessories and fabrics, were a part of the presentation today at the Fashion Congress session atop the Ritz-Carlton Hotel.

Society girls who have modeled during Fashion Congress sessions and their mothers acted as judges. The style show followed a private luncheon in the roof garden of the hotel.

The socially prominent models who displayed the fall ensembles are; Miss Evelyn Hassman, Miss Dorothy Watters, Miss Marietta Howe and Mrs. Winthrop Brown.

Mrs. Walter H. Byron, of Weston, was chairman of the judge's committee. Her charming daughter, Betsy, was also a judge.

Other mother-daughter combinations invited to make the Fashion Congress selections this week are; Mrs. Winthrop Scudder, of Brookline and her blonde daughter Sally; Mrs. Harry Britton Little, of Concord and her daughter Mimi; Mrs. J. Robie Cove and Miss Frances Cove, Mrs. Dudley P. Ranney, Mrs. Stroer P. Ware and her daughter, Betty.

It was interesting to note the discussions of fall styles which arose from this mother and daughter combination.

Ten of Boston's leading stores and specialty shops are co-operating in the "looking into the fall" show of the Congress.

Concert on Estate

Mr. and Mrs. Richard K. Thorndike are planning to open The Playhouse, the unique little theater on their Millis estate, Forestside Farm, Thursday afternoon for a concert by the popular Hampton Quartet from Hampton Institute in Virginia.

The little theater, which was reconstructed from an old barn, seats only one hundred, so the affair will not be open to the public, only invited guests will attend.

People friendly to the cause of the progressive Southern school for colored boys and girls have received invitations to hear these four good-will ambassadors from the institute.

Books on Parade

By MILES ALDEN

THE PILOTS' BOOK OF EVEREST, by Squadron Leader the Marquis of Douglas and Clydesdale, and Flight Lieutenant D. F. McIntyre. Doubleday, Doran & Company.

When "First Over Everest" was published Lord Clydesdale was ill; he did not see the proofs; his sole contribution to the work was but a short account he had written after the main flight on April 3, 1933.

Because neither he nor McIntyre was able to contribute anything adequate regarding the Everest expedition to the first, this Pilots' book has been put forth as a sort of apologia, a supplement of the other work, without which addition Clydesdale says, "the lessons learned would be incomplete and the accounts distorted."

The whole flight over Everest took but three hours, but the two pilots have conceived a story which is at once as fascinating and compelling as a long novel.

Wisely, they begin at the beginning and chronologically weave into its telling the successive steps of obtaining a backer, initial preparations at Heston airport, their flight to Le Bourget, misadventures with Italian police, trips through Cairo, Baghdad and the Persian coast and so on to Karachi.

Then they glimpsed Everest and thereafter "ate, drank and slept Everest," in Clydesdale's own words. The romance and adventure of testing their machines so that every emergency could be met mechanically reads like the most exciting of fiction.

Finally, the great thrill. Ideal weather at last, after 30 days of waiting. They're off—and back, in three hours. What in between? If you are an enthusiast of aviation and adventure you will want to find out for yourself. In doing so you will be treating yourself to one of the finest air stories ever told.

First U. S. Patent 100 Years Ago

Washington, July 28 (AP)—This is an important date in the history of American inventive genius, which has created everything from flying machines to peepless key holes.

One hundred years ago today John Ruggles, a senator from Maine, was handed the first patent under our present law, enacted July 4 that same year. It recognized an improvement on a steam locomotive.

Since that day 2,045,000 patents have been granted—many of them inventions which have given the United States unchallenged leadership in the industrial world.

JUNIOR BIRDMEN OF AMERICA

DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE YOUTH OF THE AMERICAS IN AVIATION

—TOMORROW'S MODEL PILOTS! TODAY'S PILOTS OF MODELS

Enjoying the second annual cruise at reduced rates made possible by the Boston Evening American and Paul Thurlow, general manager of the Cape Cod Steamship Company, scores of Junior Birdmen and their relatives and friends were aboard the steamer Steel Pier today on an all-day trip to Provincetown and return.

The boat left Long Wharf, Atlantic avenue, at the foot of State street, at 10 this morning on the 120-mile cruise and will dock there at 7:30 tonight to disgorge the tired but happy voyagers. A stop of an hour and a half will be made at Provincetown to give the passengers a chance to seethe sights of that historic town.

Frank A. Barrett

Many Birdmen were to get their first glimpse of Provincetown as a result of the cruise.

The reduced rates enable members of the Boston Evening American wing to buy round trip tickets for 50 cents each, providing they wore their Junior Birdmen wing pins, and enabled adults to buy round trip tickets for $1 each by clipping a coupon appearing in yesterday's edition of the American.

A feature of the cruise was a luncheon aboard the Steel Pier in honor of Frank A. Barrett, Jr., Brighton, New England's outdoor model plane champion for 1936, and the five members who gained their Ace rank with its special bars and membership cards in the recent outdoor wing tournament at Franklin Field.

The new Aces are George Noell, Medford; Andrew P. Minkus, Easthampton; Constantine Pappas, Dorchester; Gordon E. Cain, Mattapan, and Arthur E. Sampson, Dorhester.

At the luncheon, Barrett received his wing trophy and the others received medals and Ace bars.

Barrett, the only member of the Boston wing to win two championships, will represent New England in the national air races to be held next Tuesday at Franklin Field. He will compete against 16 other wing winners, representing all the large cities in which Hearst newspapers are published.

The winner of next Tuesday's classic will receive the title of America's outdoor champion for 1936, a replica of the William Randolph Hearst trophy, $250 in cash and a transcontinental air tour to Los Angeles to be a guest at the national races for powered aircraft.

REBELS RACE RED TERROR, REACH MADRID OUTSKIRTS

(Editor's Note: Lashed on by fears of a Red terror in Madrid, rebel officers have led their three northern columns to within striking distance of the capital, with one army only 25 miles distant, reports H. R. Knickerbocker today in another direct dispatch from the front. Heavy losses were suffered by the insurgents, however, in an air raid by 75 loyalist bombing planes, and the southern army is being held in check as the fratricidal war grows daily more fierce.)

By H. R. KNICKERBOCKER
International News Service Staff Correspondent
Copyright, 1936, International News Service

With the Northern Spanish Rebel Army at the Front, July 28—Rebel armies are closing in upon Madrid from the north and today their headquarters here announced they had come within a stone's throw of El Escorial, on the outskirts of the capital.

Officers on the rebel side are racing the Red terror which they believe has gripped Madrid. Fears for the safety of their families within the ReRd lines has become profound and whipped the spirits of the white troops to a raging pitch, as reports reached here of the torture and murder of civilians.

Few such reports can be authenticated, but headquarters here officially announced one particularly revolting atrocity.

REDS SACK HOMES

Just beyond Somo Sierra, where the rebel troops of Colonel Garcia Escamez have driven through the mountain pass and down to Robregardo, are the smoking ruins of a peasant house. In this house the wounded body of the young Fascist leader, Carlos Miralles, lay until he died, after leading 80 youthful aristocrats in an attack upon the Reds.

Shortly after the Whits forces rescued Miralles' body, the Reds retook the peasant house and, as headquarters assert, they burned it down and with it burned the household of father, mother and five children as punishment for having sheltered an enemy.

War's usual crop of atrocity stories has grown to lush proportions in this Spanish war of classes.

On this side they declare that the Reds in San Sebastian slaughtered 50 aristocrats and tortured others in the approved Ethiopian manner, while still other Whites shot themselves rather than risk torture after capture.

It now appears that San Sebastian is not yet entirely in the hands of the Rebel army.

PLANES BOMB TROOPS

What is happening in Madrid cannot be known accurately here, but the white officers are feverish with anxiety for their loved ones.

They believe that the situation in the capital is comparable to that in Petrograd just after the Bolsheviks took power. Hourly they await notice that Madrid will use the families of the whites as hostages.

Spurred by these anxieties, the white army today abandoned its usual tactics of marching chiefly at night in order to avoid air attacks, and pushed ahead by daylight.

Seventy-five bombing airplanes from Madrid counter-attacked on all fronts and, flying low, sent a stream of machine gun bullets ripping through the rebel ranks.

No casualty list was issued, and it is impossible to estimate the total of dead and wounded in the 12 days' civil war, but it is probable that the losses run into thousands.

The whites are eager to minimize losses on both sides, for bitter though this civil war is, the Spaniards have not lost sight of the fact that they are killing their own people.

Eaton, Captain William Wincapaw, the plane's pilot, and Herbert Stier. They were flying over the arriving liner Queen Mary off the Nantucket Lightship when a powerful downdraft plunged the craft into the water. Edwin T. Ramsdell, Boston newspaper photographer, suffered fatal injuries in the crash and died aboard the Exermont.

Rebel Prisoners Ordered Shot to Save Food

prisoners should be shot because they "eat too much."

Spanish rebel leaders contemplate a "strong military dictatorship," Gen. Mola said today.

"We will create a huge army equivalent to any in Europe," the tall, slightly stoop-shouldered officer declared.

"We must have a strong army for we are determined to keep order in Spain and give the fatherland its rightful place in the sun."

General Mola refused to admit the possibility of defeat of the rebellion.

"We expect to get to Madrid Thursday or Friday at the latest," he smiled confidently. "We are in no hurry for a victory which is certain. The old Left organization will collapse when we enter the capital."

'America's Floating Embassy Rescues More Citizens

Washington, July 28 (AP)—America's first "Floating Embassy" was believed to have started operations today to speed the arduous task of rescuing imperiled Americans from Spain's civil war.

Hampered by wrecked communications and paralyzed transportation systems on land, Ambassador Claude G. Bowers had notified the state department today of his decision to transfer his headquarters to the roving coast guard cutter Cayuga.

The ambassador declared he would thus be in a position to run along the Spanish coast helping to the job of evacuation and otherwise assisting United States Nationals.

Other messages indicated that the long-delayed flight of more than 160 Americans huddled in the regular embassy at Madrid, in the interior country, had at last begun. Going full speed, the American cruiser Quincy sailed toward Alicante, where some of the Americans were reported to have been carried aboard a special train.

Chafing at his virtual isolation in his summer villa at Fuenterrabia, near San Sebastian, Ambassador Bowers finally got to St. Jean de Luz, across the French border, yesterday, to notify the government here of his plans for re-seizing embassy.

Placing his belongings aboard the cutter today, he planned to proceed on the vessel along the northern Spanish coast as far as Vigo.

The cruiser Quincy, in addition of touching at Alicante, was expected also to investigate conditions at Barcelona and Valencia. News despatches from Madrid indicated that five Americans had fled from the capital toward Valencia.

The names of the five were given as a Mr. and Mrs. Hepburn and Richard Aldsworth of Chicago and Los Angeles, Miss Atkinson of New York and Maria Olsen of Deerfield, Mass.

A delayed dispatch from Consul John D. Johnson, at Madrid, reported he had received "indirect information" that the 12 American college boys and girls caught at Lagranja in the shell-torn Guadarrama mountains, are safe with the chaperone, Mrs. Monica Owen, of Cambridge, Mass.

Johnson did not specify the source of his reports from the party, Mrs. Owen last was heard from July 14.

The names of four girls and six youths in Mrs. Owen's party, one of 15 educational groups sent to Europe this summer by the International Living Experiment of Syracuse, N. Y., were announced by the State Department. They are:

The Misses Joanne Barnes, Duluth; Barbara Longstreth, Haverford, Penn.; Polly Wiggin, New Haven, and Martha Wernkenn, Detroit.

Also Stephen Rowelson, Syracuse; Winfield Abbott and Paul Harper, Chicago; Clement Chase, Ashokan, N. Y.; Keen Butcher, Ardmore, Penn., and Ernst Mueller, Cleveland.

The State Department also made public names of 11 additional Americans, known to have been safely evacuated from Malaga, to Gibraltar:

Isabelle Cecilia Barry, Milton, Mass.; Anne Fairchild and Gladys Bowler, Noroton, Conn.; Walter Bassett and wife, Boston; Miss Lillian Boyce, Boston; Stanley T. Bush, wife, and Charles Bush, Back Bay, Boston; George R. Conquest, Malvern, Eng.; Elizabeth Healy (believed of 89 Bank street, New York); Louis Kantor (believed of 552 Fifth avenue, New York); Mr. and Mrs. Henry Mates (believed of 2915 Otis avenue, Bronx, New York); Maristrica McDermott (believed of 3721 88th street, Jackson Heights, Long Island, N. Y.), and Robert McKinley (believed of 1117 Princeton road, Pittsburgh).

Tropical Storm Heads for Florida

Jacksonville, Fla., July 28 (AP)—South Florida, from Fort Pierce to Key West along the Atlantic Coast, braced itself today for a tropical storm advancing out of the Bahama Islands.

The weather bureau said the disturbance still is increasing in intensity, but probably has not yet reached hurricane force.

Indications are that the storm will reach the extreme southeast Florida coast, near Miami, during the latter part of the afternoon, attended by gales over a small area near the center and by tides above normal, with increasing winds beginning about noon, a U. S. advisory said.

Northeast storm warnings were hoisted all along the east coast, vessels off the coast were urged to take precautions.

Bay State Envoy Fears 20 Americans in Peril

Copyright, 1936, International News Service

Aboard U. S. S. Oklahoma, off Bilbao, Spain, July 27—Grave fears are felt for the safety of 20 Americans who fled the Vigo district with the approach of sanguinary fighting and attempted to make their way southward across the Portuguese border. W. W. Corcoran, of Massachusetts, U. S. Consul at Vigo, radioed the Oklahoma today.

Corcoran added that about 40 Americans, Cubans and Panamanians remain in the district and he requested that an American warship stand by, ready to take them off.

(Editor's Note—In dispatches to the State Department at Washington Corcoran yesterday reported an extremely grave situation was developing at Vigo and added that he was evacuating 2 Americans and Cubans aboard a British cruiser at once).

Duped in Swindle

The fake oculist swindle, uncovered during the past few months in western Massachusetts, has been extended into this section of the state with several Greater Boston residents complaining to police that they have been duped by bogus eye doctors.

'MARTYR NURSE' HAS RELAPSE

Because her condition took a sudden change for the worse, Miss Frances Moore, 25, "martyr nurse," could not undergo a contemplated brain operation at City Hospital today.

Dr. Donald Munro, brain specialist, was to have performed the operation on the girl who was accidentally kicked in the head by a patient at Boston Lying-In Hospital two weeks ago.

The operation was planned to remove a blood clot which is pressing on the brain. Miss Moore spent a comfortable night, but took a bad turn and was too weak to undergo the surgery. If she gains strength, the operation will be performed. If she doesn't improve, death appears imminent, doctors said.

Capital Shaft Hit by Bolt

Washington, July 28 (US)—A lightning bolt hit the Washington Monument during the height of an electric storm here last night and put out the red beacon lights which mark the shaft for incoming planes.

Although lightning frequently hits the tall shaft, it was the first time that a bolt had done any damage.

The bolt hit the top of the shaft, travelled down the wires and wound up in the telephone switchboard.

LAST RITES For Ramsdell; HOME FUNERAL

Funeral services for Edwin T. Ramsdell, Boston Post photographer who died following a crash of the plane in which he was riding to take pictures of the Queen Mary off Nantucket, will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 from the home of Mrs. Ramsdell's mother, Mrs. J. McMullin at 1137 Boylston street, Newton.

Services will be conducted by the Rev. Charles C. P. Hiller of the Cline Memorial M. E. of Newton Highlands.

Ramsdell was considered one of the best aerial photographers in the newspaper profession. In addition to his newspaper work, he had done considerable compiling of aerial maps.

He had been employed by the Post since 1919 and worked on nearly every big story that "broke" in the past decade.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Laura Ramsdell, a daughter, Shirley, 15, and a sister, Mrs. Robert Keene, of Tremont street, Newton. He lived at 64 Cook street, Newton.

War Orders Call Off Test Flights

Ottawa, Ont., July 28 (INS)—Because British factories are so busy turning out military planes under the new armaments program, test flights for a projected transatlantic service over a northern route have been definitely abandoned, it was learned from Canadian air officials today.

SPANISH CRISIS PUTS FRANCE NEAR WAR

By ARNO DOSCH-FLEUROT
Universal Service Special Cable

Paris, July 28—King Edward's decision to abandon his vacation on the French Riviera, plus the startling news that 50 French military planes arrived in Barcelona, threw French political circles into a state of deepest concern today.

Added anxiety was felt over the presence of several German and Italian warships in Spanish waters.

It was clear that France will be the center of an international drama caused by efforts of Premier Blum's radical government to aid the Communist regime of Spain in putting down the latter's Fascist army rebellion.

The French public was deeply impressed by King Edward's decision not to vacation in France because of "events in Spain."

RIVIERA DISAPPOINTED

Riviera hotel man and merchants bewail the loss of their anticipated brilliant social season. But government officials are relieved at not having the responsibility of the British monarch's presence during the present political storm within France itself and the gathering of clouds on the international horizon.

News of the arrival of the French military planes at Barcelona to aid the radical Spanish government against the conservative army insurgents literally shocked France.

The shock was more stunning in view of the fact that the Blum government, without making an official declaration, gave out the implication that it would not countenance the sending of arms or munitions to war-torn Spain.

300 PLANES ORDERED

Arrival of the French planes was reported by only one French news agency, Arence Radio. It reported that the 50 planes constituted only the first contingent of an order for 300 to assist the radical Spanish regime.

In the corridors of the Chamber of Deputies the topic was considered extremely serious.

Rene Dommange, deputy from the Seine department, who several days ago interpellated the Blum government as to whether it had agreed to furnish arms to the Spanish Radicals, told Universal Service:

"I was to repeat my interpellations tomorrow, as the question of sending arms to Spain is an urgent one, but the government has put me off until Friday, the limit of legal delays.

"I will not be satisfied with anything short of a definite statement that the French government will prevent the sending of arms or munitions to Spain as the present dubious situation is open many ways of sending armed help to the Spanish regime."

Slaying Suspect To Face Lineup

Two New York witnesses to the slaying for which police here are holding Joseph York, 22, of Clinton street, New York city, were to view him in the lineup today in an effort to identify him as the killer.

Inspector Irving W. Dribbon accompanied the witnesses here from New York.

Beer Boxes Keep Olympic Torch Alive

Vienna, July 28 (AP)—Reports reaching Vienna today said the Olympic flame, which is being borne by relay runners from Greece to Berlin, was saved from being extinguished by a pile of beer cases near Parsein, Yugoslavia.

The torch was almost burned out before the runner covered his allotted distance. Brewery workers, noting his predicament, broke up beer cases which they ignited while another torch was sought.

The flame was carried across the Hungarian border near Beaged and borns in an elaborate ceremony to Budapest.

Meanwhile Vienna police grew apprehensive and took precautionary measures on hearing reports that Austrian Nazis planned to welcome the flame tomorrow with a demonstration exceeding the limits fixed by the Austro-German accord. The rules prohibited the singing of then Horst Wessel song—the Nazi marching song.

DUBORD SEES GOOD TIMES

Patten, Me., July 28—Drawing an analogy between the New Deal and a football eleven, F. Harold Dubord, Democratic nominee for Governor, declared at a rally at Shin Pond, that the "recovery team had put the old depression team on the run."

"President Roosevelt is the recovery team's fullback," he declared.

"He has hit the old depression line time and time again for long gains," said Dubord.

"The American people know that he can hang onto the ball," he declared.

Dubord said the old G. O. P. players, sent to the showers in 1933, have been "so green with envy—they would rather see the recovery team defeated than have the present players gather credit which is rightfully theirs."

"We are now going into the last quarter," he said, "and the woes will climb to as much as 150 to nothing."

Dairymen Planning Price Agreement

A mass meeting of dairymen supplying the bulk of the milk delivered to the Greater Boston market is to be held today in an effort to reach a satisfactory agreement by which the market can be continued on a stable basis. The technical breakdown of federal regulation of the Greater Boston milk industry is said to make the meeting necessary.

Attending the meeting will be representatives of the four big dairy co-operatives and the three smaller organizations which, among them, supply the Boston market about entirely.

El Appeal Up

Counsel for the Boston Elevated Railway and the government have been given 60 days in which to file briefs in the appeal of the El from federal income tax assessments amounting to $477,000.

"THE BOY CASTAWAYS," BY JULES VERNE

CHAPTER TWENTY

This cave was the same height and width as French Den, but much deeper. The floor, covered by a fine sand, was about 50 square yards. There did not seem to be an entrance. But since the beacon burned brightly, the air must come in by some opening. Otherwise, how could Phann have got inside?

At that moment Wilcox kicked a body, stiff and cold. Briant came close with the beacon.

"It's a jackal which Phann must have killed!"

"Yes! a jackal!" cried Baxter. "That's the explanation of the noises," said Gordon.

But, if jackals had made this cave their shelter, how did they get in? That they must discover at all cost.

Briant went out to the cliff on the side of the lake. He called loudly several times and at last was answered by cries from the interior.

In this way he discovered a narrow opening in the undergrowth through which the jackals must have slid. The boys soon found that after Phann had followed the jackal, a small slide occurred and closed the opening.

That explained everything; the howlings of the jackal, the barkings of the imprisoned dog. What a satisfaction it was to have Phann back, and what a lot of work spared! Here was a vast cave "already made," a cave of which the shipwrecked Baudoin had never suspected the existence.

By enlarging the entrance there would be another door opening on the side of the lake. This would make everything easier inside. The boys shrieked and hurrahed, while Phann barked joyfully.

With great enthusiasm they transformed the tunnel into a practicable passage. The second excavation, which they called "the hall" justified its name by its dimensions.

All the material was carried into the hall which also would serve as a sleeping apartment and work room, while the first cave would be used as kitchen, storeroom and dining hall. They decided to call it the "storeroom."

They Move

The boys first moved the bunks to the hall. Then they carried in the couches, armchairs, tables and dressers, and the stoves from the dining-room and drawing-room of the yacht.

The opening on the side of the lake was enlarged and one of the schooner's doors was hung there. Two openings were pierced on each side of this door, giving sufficient light to the hall.

These arrangements took about 15 days. By that time, although it was not yet extremely cold, the storms became so violent that all excursions outside were forbidden. The force of the wind was broken by the cliff, but it made huge waves on the lake that unfurled with tremendous noise.

They drew the yawl up on the beach so it would not be carried away. At times the waters of the river covered the bank and threatened to wash into the cave itself. Fortunately, since the wind blew from the west, neither the storeroom nor the hall was directly exposed to the roughness of the storm.

So the stoves and the kitchen range burned without trouble. With everything they had saved from the Sloughi under shelter, the provisions no longer were exposed to winter weather . . . Imprisoned by the bad season, the boys had plenty of time to settle themselves more comfortably.

They enlarged the passage and dug two deep recesses, one of which, closed by a door, was reserved for munitions, to lessen chances of an explosion. The ostrich was kept in a corner of the store-room until they could conduct an enclosure for him outside.

The evening of June tenth, while they were sitting around the stoves in the hall after supper, the importance of giving names to the principal geographical features of the island was mentioned.

"It would be useful and very practical," said Briant.

"Yes, some names!" cried Iverson, "some good names."

"Just like Robinson Crusoe," answered Webb.

"Actually, we're nothing else," said Gordon.

"A School of Robinson Crusoes," cried Service.

"By naming the bay, the rivers, the forests, the lake, the cliffs, the marshes and the promontories, it would be easier for us to recognize where we are," said Gordon, and it was decided to find suitable names.

"We already have Sloughi Bay," said Doniphan, "and I think we should keep that name now that we're used to it."

"Surely," agreed Cross.

"We'll also keep the name of French Den in memory of the castaways," added Briant.

Their Country

There was no opposition to that suggestion.

"And now," said Wilcox, "what shall we call the river that empties into Sloughi Bay?"

"Let the river be given the name of our Zealand," proposed Baxter. "It will remind us of our own country."

"Adopted! Adopted!" cried the boys without a dissenting voice.

"And the lake?" asked Garnett.

"Let's give the lake a name which will remind us of our families. Let's call it Family Lake," suggested Doniphan.

This was done by acclamation. Then the name Auckland Hill was given to the cliff. The cape that terminated the promontory, from which Briant thought he had discovered a sea, was named, "False Sea Point," on his suggestion.

They named Traps Woods that part of the forest where the traps were first discovered; Bog-Woods the part between Sloughi Bay and the cliff; South-Moors the marshes which covered the southern part of the island; Dike-Creek the little river with the stone causeway; Wreck-Coast the shore on which the yacht had been wrecked, and Sport-Terrace the space between the bank of the river and the lake in front of the hall, which formed a lawn which would be used later for sports.

To the principal promontories marked on Francois Baudoin's map they gave these names; in the north of the island, North Cape; to the south, South Cape, and the three points which projected to the west, French Cape, British Cape and American Cape in honor of the three nations represented in the little colony.

Colony! Yes! That name was then proposed to remind them that their settlement was no longer temporary. These young boys were no longer the castaways of the Sloughi. They were settlers on an island.

But of which island? It was now its turn to be named.

"I know what it should be named," cried Costar.

"What, Costar?" asked Briant.

"Well," said Costar, "since we are pupils of the Chairman School, let's call it Chairman Island."

A Chief!

There was a roar of approval. They could not have found a better name. Costar was very proud of thinking of it by himself.

Chairman Island! The name had a certain geographic tone, and it would look well in the geographies of the future.

After everything was named Briant asked if he might say a few words. The boys consented and Briant said:

"Now that we have given a name to our island, wouldn't it be fitting to choose a chief?"

"A chief!" said Doniphan, quickly.

"Yes, it seems to me that everything would go along better," answered Briant, "if one of us had authority of the others. That is done in all countries. Isn't it reasonable to do the same for Chairman Island?"

"Yes! A chief, let's have a chief!" cried the boys all.

"Let's name a chief, then," said Doniphan, "but only for a determined length of time . . . say a year."

"And then he may be re-elected," added Briant.

"All right, who shall we name?" asked Doniphan, in rather an anxious tone.

The jealous boy seemed to have only one fear . . . that the choice would go to Briant instead of himself.

"I nominate the most reasonable of us all, our comrade, Gordon!" said Briant.

"Yes! You, Gordon! Hurrah for Gordon!"

Gordon was inclined to refuse the honor, wishing more to organize than to command. But in thinking of the trouble that could be caused by disagreements among the boys, he decided that his authority would not be useless.

And that is how Gordon was proclaimed chief of the little colony of Chairman Island.

Gordon calculated that the winter which had begun in May would end about the middle of September. They also had to reckon with frequent storms during the equinox. So it was probable that the young colonists would be confined in French Den until early October . . . And so Gordon outlined a program for the months of indoor life.

As the library contained but a few books of science the older boys could keep up their studies only in a limited measure. Yet the difficulties of existence, the every day fight to provide the necessities of life, the need to exercise judgment and imagination would teach them the seriousness of life and make them better educators of their young comrades.

The program was based on these principles of Anglo-Saxon education:

"Every time a thing frightens you, do it."

"Never lose a chance to make a possible effort."

"Have no contempt for fatigue, for the body or brain must be cared for when tired."

This program called for two hours in the morning and two in the afternoon to be devoted to work in common in the hall.

In turns Briant, Doniphan, Cross and Baxter, of the fifth form, and Wilcox and Webb of the fourth, would teach their comrades of the third, second and first forms.

They would teach them mathematics, geography and history, helping themselves with the few books on these subjects which were in the library. Sundays and Thursdays there would be debates on science or history or on current events, dealing with their everyday life.

Gordon, as chief, would see that this schooling program was strictly followed.

Wilcox was given the task of regularly winding the clocks from the yacht, and Baxter of keeping track of the calendar. Webb made a daily record of the barometer and the thermometer. Baxter also volunteered to keep a journal of everything taking place during their life on Chairman Island. Moko, helped by the older boys, had the job of washing the linen of French Den and the boys' clothing.

Letter Writing Made Easy

NELL'S making an easy job of letter-writing! Outdoors, where she's in a happy, chatty mood.

No wailing remarks in her letters, such as, "It's too hot to live, I simply can't stand it."

She just pokes fun at the hot spell, as she chats on paper with Jim:

"The cat and puppy are stretched out under the syringa bush. Old differences forgotten on a day like this. The tree-climbing little Moore girls are reduced to making hollyhock dolls. Dear old Grandma Elliot is the only unwilted soul around. She insists on canning 'churnin'."

Of course Nell wouldn't use such a light, informal tone to any one except a close friend. To Mrs. Atwood, a newcomer in town, she might write:

"It was ever so good of you to take over my Sunday-school class last Sunday. I had a last minute upset of plans. Thank you very much indeed for coming to the rescue."

She varies her stationery and salutation according to letter etiquette. Note-paper for social letters, letter-head for business. She begins "Dear Jimmy," for a very informal note. "My dear Mrs. Atwood," is a formal salutation. "Dear Sir," is suited to business.

Our 40-page booklet, How to Write Letters for All Occasions, tells you all the do's and don'ts of good letter-writing. Correct form, tone, subject matter, all made clear by many sample letters.

Variations ON THE Dessert THEME

By MARTHA LEE

OF ALL the desserts served today, none is more popular than ice cream. Again and again it's our choice for family and company desserts, particularly with the easy modern way of making it in the automatic refrigerator.

Have a few tricky ways of serving it at your finger tips —ways that will startle and please your guests. These extra touches so very effective in themselves are easy to attain.

One of the most attractive desserts suitable for a crowd is an ice cream torte. Make the torte which is a large meringue baked either in layer cake form or spring mold form. Place this on a large platter with ice cream on top and sides and cover with fruit or whipped cream. Ice cream may be combined to carry out a color scheme, such as vanilla and raspberry sherbet with raspberries over all. Or a vanilla and peach ice cream with peaches for a garnish. Or a vanilla and chocolate ice cream with chocolate sauce. This is cut in pie shaped pieces to serve.

Baked Alaska is another special way of serving ice cream and this marshmallow surprise is a variation of this type of dessert.

MARSHMALLOW SURPRISE

Cut out part of the center of a cake. Fill the cake hollow with ice cream, level the top with a spoon dipped in hot water and completely cover the frozen filling with marshmallows. Toast their tops by slipping the finished surprise under a broiler flame for a few seconds. Fear not, firm ice cream will not melt in the short time that is required for browning.

RASPBERRY ICE CREAM ROLL

Rich baking power biscuit dough
2 cups blackberries
½ cup powdered sugar
1 pint peach ice cream

Roll biscuit dough out into a sheet about 10 inches square. Spread with the blackberries mixed with powdered sugar. Roll like a jelly roll and pinch the edges together to prevent the fruit juices from escaping. Place in a shallow buttered pan and brush top of the roll with cream. Bake in a moderate oven (350 deg. F.) for 45 minutes. Slice and serve hot, topped with peach ice cream. Serves 6 to 8.

RASPBERRY ICE MREAM PIE

1 baked pie shell
1 pint orange pineapple ice cream
1 pint raspberries
2 tablespoons powdered sugar
3 egg whites
6 tablespoons granulated sugar
½ teaspoon vanilla

Pack orange pineapple ice cream in a baked pie shell which has been chilled. Sprinkle raspberries with powdered sugar and spread over the ice cream. Cover the top of the pie with the meringue made by beating the egg whites until stiff and folding in the granulated sugar and vanilla. Place under the broiler to brown the top. (The meringue must be browned quickly so that the ice cream will not melt.) Serve immediately.

ICE CREAM MOLD

Fill a deep refrigerator tray with chocolate ice cream about one-inch from the top. When the ice cream is thoroughly frozen scoop out its center the entire length of the tray, two-thirds of its depth. Fill the groove with vanilla ice cream. Fill the tray by spreading the remainder of the chocolate ice cream over the top. When sliced, this makes a striking contrast.

"Your Figure, Madame!"

By IDA JEAN KAIN

(Copyright, 1936, by King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

MOST OF US look at beauty as the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow, and so fail to see our own possibilities. Loveliness is made up of a number of little things, but the big thing is posture.

While good figures and good posture are not synonymous, one cannot have a lovely figure with careless posture. Look at the stars of the stage and screen and you will see that this is true. All have regal postures which reflect their varied personalities.

Paulette Goddard is like an arrow, and her irrepressible vitality is shown in her posture. The exquisite Dolores del Rio's bearing reflects her splendid health, all the more prized because it has been regained. Jessica Dragonette walks in the grand manner, commanding attention with her beautiful carriage. Katharine Hepburn's confidence reveals courage and determination.

An erect carriage can make a good figure superb and a mediocre figure attractive. No figure needs to be dumpy or humdrum, but the majority of us plod along without realizing that a beautiful carriage can give us confidence and poise and lift us out of our grooves.

Posture Beauty

Posture can have everything wrong with it, from double chins to lordosis, but it is amazing what corrective exercise can do. Stooped shoulders are a common defect, along with a depressed chest and forward-thrusting head. This fault can be corrected with a magic wave of the wand. Take a light, strong stick—a broomhandle is excellent—and, grasping either end, raise it high overhead, then lower, back of the shoulders. Repeat from 12 to 25 counts.

An increase of the curve in the spinal lumbar region, called lordosis or swayback, is accompanied by a protruding abdomen and rounded shoulders. An excellent corrective exercise is taken while sitting on the floor, knees straight, buttocks against the wall, forcing the small of the back flat against the wall streamlines the weakened abdominal muscles as well as those of the lumbar spine.

Lateral curvature of the spine may also be corrected with exercise, but these exercises must be under the supervision of an instructor. If your posture is decidedly out of line, it would pay you to consult one of these instructors at a Y. W. C. A. gymnasium, or at a figure salon.

First attempts to stand correctly will be tiring, for it is much easier to assume a position for which the muscles have been trained than to re-educate these muscles. You must first strengthen the weak muscles, and in this connection you will find the four introductory exercises in the

ADVICE on LOVE and MARRIAGE by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Jealous Men and Glass Should Be 'Handled With Care'

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

The man who fights fire with gasoline "starts something." And the woman that attacks jealousy with more cause for jealousy fares no better.

A jealous husband, at full speed, makes a big city fire look like a dying ember. He's a veritable volcano.

Mrs. J. D. doesn't describe her trouble in these words, but, nonetheless, she will agree with me, I know. Here is the interesting letter she writes:

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I never once thought of loving my neighbor, but try to tell that to my husband!

My neighbor is married, middle-aged, and perfectly happy with his wife. He certainly hasn't the slightest idea of proposing to me.

Our friendship was most casual. It happened that the neighbor shared my interest in flowers. When I was in my garden, he came over one evening and talked an hour.

The next night I went over to see his garden. His wife was attending a club meeting and I saw no harm in keeping him company on the porch until she returned.

In the weeks that followed we met many times. But always our conversation was of the most impersonal kind—flowers, weather, politics, etc. Love was the one thing neither of us ever thought of mentioning.

The village gossips, observing the neighbor and me talking, assumed something must be other than it should be, went to my husband and bared their suspicions.

Then the war began. Naturally jealous, my husband became almost a maniac. The things he said, the threats he made are driving me to distraction. Honestly, I'm as good as in the divorce court right now.

How can a wife handle a man of this type? Would I be wise in deliberately seeing more of the neighbor and giving my husband real cause for jealousy? It seems the only way left to me.

MRS. J. D.

MY DEAR FRIEND:

If you wish to completely wreck your own home and take your neighbor's home into the bargain, then go ahead with your more-and-better-jealousy plans. Of course, you'll be flirting with murder and all that!

My advise to you is forget you ever met this neighbor. It is the only thing to do if you desire to be a GOOD neighbor.

Explain the situation to him if you will, but firmly resolve to see him no more.

Fortunately, fits of jealousy are usually short-lived. Consequently you may look for a speedy recovery so far as your husband is concerned. And, realizing that he has accused you wrongly, he will be inclined to be more considerate and less gullible when the "gossips" pay a return visit.

BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

From many of the letters readers write you, I gather that many girls think marriage the simple matter of rejecting one man and accepting the proposal of a better one. If such is true, I've been pretty much "out of luck" all my life.

I am 38, and not one bit afraid to admit it. Fairly attractive, college educated and otherwise fortunate materially, I ought to be considered at least an average bargain in the matrimonial market. But am I?

Not that you'd notice it! So many men have passed my doorstep that the walk is worn down to the gravel. Not one has ever taken it into his head to stop, enter and inquire whether I would like the experience of being his wife.

Of course, I've gone to dances, as w so many movies that I'm almost an authority, became a veritable expert on what to do and what not to do at parties. But it is all to no avail. Men will have no part of me.

The only way I can explain it is that some girls are born for marriage; others for spinsterhood. What do you say?

FLORENCE S.

DEAR FLORENCE,

More women than men want to be married. That is a fact. The depression, unemployment and the general uncertainty have combined to make even the stoutest-hearted male a little bit afraid to assume the responsibility of a home, a wife and children.

To this fear may be ascribed the reason for thousands of women reaching their late thirties with never an offer of marriage. It isn't that they are homely, ignorant and lacking the qualifications of a wife. Rather it is that they did not have the good fortune to meet the rare man who dared to attempt matrimony.

The World War which killed millions, injured hundreds of thousands and spread general want throughout the world indirectly created untold numbers of old maids. After the guns had ceased blazing and the Armistice declared there just was not enough men to go around. That is why you and thousands like you are spinsters IN SPITE of yourselves.

Men bear the brunt of warfare while the bayonets are bared and the canons are roaring. But in the long run it is the women who pay. History, a study of all the wars and the periods that followed, will agree with me, I think.

DEAR MISS FAIRPAX:

I met a girl whom I learned to love in a store where I worked. We used to see each other every night. I gave her a friendship ring and she gave me her school ring.

I lost my job and the young man who took over my work is now going around with this girl. I have been unable to compete with him as I have no money.

What should I do? Should I ask her for the ring and then try to forget her?

HERMIT.

MY DEAR HERMIT:

It is quite evident that the young lady you mention has transferred her affections. You are lucky to find out her fickleness so speedily. I should ask her for the ring, return the one she loaned you and then try to forget her. There are lots of other good girls in the world.

Married Comrades

CHAPTER 60

I DID NOT have to wait at all for Mary's reaction to my statement that I should have to lean heavily upon her in the emergency forced upon me by my father's departure upon a secret government task.

And the imminent prospect of receiving his twin brother into the farm house at the end of a secret night journey, and passing him off to the countryside as may father, so that no one should guess a substitution had been made.

She turned across the room and impetuously threw her arms around me, nearly squeezing the breath out of me.

"You always make a body feel as if he—in this case—she—could 'whip her weight in wild cats,'" she said. "And I won't fail you. I shall be at your call any hour of the day or night. And am I glad of the chance? It'll keep me from thinking. That's all I ask; to be kept busy every waking minute."

KATHERINE RETURNS

I returned her embrace, and smiled down at her flushed face and excited eyes.

"I'll try to see that you are gratified on that score," I told her, my tone purposely light. But before she had time to answer me, Katherine came back into the room, unhurriedly, but not waiting for an answer to her preliminary light tap. Though her poise was unruffled, I knew from that omission that something important was in the offing, and could not wait upon ceremony.

"I'm glad you're still here," she said to Mary. "Will you stay until we get back again?"

My reply was quickened at her use of the plural pronoun. Where was she taking me, and why? That it had to do with her sudden exit after I had told her of the dilemma confronting us, I was sure. But I could not even summon a lucid conjecture as to what she wanted.

Mary's reply was prompt.

FATHER WANTS THEM

"Of course," she said. "Is there anything you want me to do for the baby?"

"I think she'll sleep until I get back," Katherine said. "If she wakens, let her alone, unless she gets to fussing. Then use your own judgment."

She turned to me and held out her hand in comradely fashion.

"Your father wants to see us, Madge," she said, and putting my hand in hers, I went with her out of the room, silent, feeling a difficulty in breathing, for I could not help the intuition, stronger now, which had come to me when Katherine went out of the room to see my father—the feeling that she saw some danger —or, at least, an emergency—which I had not yet realized.

"Relax! Silly!" Katherine whispered as we went down the hall. "Nobody's going to be hung. I would tell you all about it if I had time, but it's something that can't be related in fragments, so you'll just have to wait until we get to your father's room, but no longer."

TENSION RELIEVED

Her confident tone had its effect, and though I was still uneasy, my nerves were not nearly so tense as when we finally entered my father's room.

The door evidently had been left ajar for us, and though Dicky and my father were still seated opposite each other, with the table heaped with papers between them there was something in their attitude which showed me that for the moment they were not considering the work which had so absorbed their attention during the last half hour.

But as they rose upon our entrance, and put us into comfortable chairs, I knew that Katherine's confident air had been simply camouflage, and that something vaguely menacing confronted me.

"Margaret," my father said gravely, "Katherine has apprised me of plans somewhat. She tells me that she will be unable to stay at the farm house during my absence, and that you will have to install another nurse for Baby Faith."

HAS ALTERNATE PLAN

I could not help the reproachful look I shot at Katherine. When she had told me that she must get away before Hal Meredith came back from Europe, so far and so securely hidden that he could not find her, I had felt in some way I would be able to mek her reconsider her decision.

Then my father's news had driven everything else out of my mind, but nobody could have made me believe that she would keep to her purpose when an emergency such as the present confronted us, and she was so sorely needed.

She met my look squarely, not at all abashed.

"But she has an alternate plan which meets with my fullest approval and with Richard's," my father said, and unseen by my father, Katharine's eyes telegraphed whimsical reassurance to mine.

Stage Star's Beauty Secrets

POSED BY GRACIE BARRIE

Lovely Gracie Barrie Gives Her Formula for Facial

By ARLINE GOULD

WHEN A woman's job or career depends in a large measure on her beauty, it's interesting to know what she does to achieve and preserve that beauty.

So we went to see lovely Gracie Barrie, formerly of the "Scandals" and now appearing at the Metropolitan Theater. We asked her for some of her secrets of loveliness, hoping that she would share them with our readers.

The clear radiance of Miss Barrie's skin impressed us particularly, so we asked her how she managed to keep her complexion so exquisite when she uses stage make-up so frequently.

* * *

"I do have a little beauty secret," she said, "that keeps my skin in good condition. I believe that the many beauty aids on the market are necessary, but they must be supplemented. The goddess of beauty helps those who help themselves!

"Tissue and skin-feeding creams are excellent but one must also be in good health, eat the right foods, drink lots of water and get enough air, sunshine and exercise.

"Once a week I pat ordinary sweet milk or cream on my face and throat, and leave it on overnight. It acts as a combination softener, skin food and mild bleach.

"And then once a week—without fail—I give myself an old-fashioned egg facial, the recipe for which I learned from a famous beauty much older than I. A facial of this kind leaves the skin clean, closes the pores and stimulates the blood to renewed action. It's grand for days when you have a special engagement and are tired.

"It takes ten minutes at the most and makes you feel and look tingling and rosy."

Miss Barrie has discovered a special cream for removing make-up which she thinks is the most effective thing of its kind on the market. In fact, its cleansing with such thoroughness that she recommends it to all women for removing street make-up and the dust and grime of city life.

Instead of regular grease paint Miss Barrie uses a new product which leaves a flattering, dull finish and doesn't require the use of powder. This product which she uses in a suntan shade is grand, she thinks, for street make-up and beach glamor.

Rheumatic Heart

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

IN THE treatment of rheumatic heart disease we need to make progress. Recently I read an encouraging report covering the advances made in this field.

New methods of treatment give a more favorable outlook in this disease. To be able to control any form of heart disease will be looked upon as an outstanding medical achievement, and sure to save the lives of thousands of men, women and children.

It is a misfortune to have acute rheumatic fever because persons so afflicted are likely to become the victims of rheumatic heart disease. This disease and its heart complications usually occur during childhood. Any form of heart disease is greatly feared. But children with rheumatic heart are no longer doomed as they used to be.

To understand rheumatic heart disease it is necessary to be familiar with some of the aspects of acute rheumatic fever, an infectious disease of the body. Though the exact germ has never been found, it is believed to be caused by an organism of micrococcipeid fineness and belonging to the streptococcus group. This is the same variety of germ that produces scarlet fever and erysipelas.

REACH THE JOINTS

The germs enter the blood stream and are carried to different parts of the body. As a rule, they reach the joints, where they develop a severe and painful inflammation. The disease is likely to begin abruptly with fever, in severe cases the heart becomes involved and one or several of its valves may be damaged.

Often the disease is confused with "growing pains," for the reason that the child complains of pains in the legs. Of course, a normal and healthy child never suffers such a thing as growing pains. Pain at this age means something more than mere growth.

All authorities believe that rest is the most important part of the treatment. Sir Thomas Lewis, the English heart specialist, states that rest is essential until all active signs of the disease have disappeared.

Whenever possible, the patient should be moved to a hot, sunny climate. It is of interest to learn that recurrences are rare for those who live in tropical or subtropical climates. Where this is not possible, the patient should be protected against cold and dampness and should have the benefits of fresh air and sunlight.

ANSWERS TO HEALTH QUERIES

C. B. Q.—What can be done for bloating, an unpleasant taste in the mouth and general discomfort after eating? I also have an itching rash—the blisters are filled with water.

A.—Watch your diet and elimination. Hyperacidity would be apt to cause symptoms such as you describe. For full particulars send a self-addressed, stamped envelope and repeat your question.

Bridge

The Crucial First Plays

By JOSEPHINE CULBERTSON

I venture to say that the fate of 75 per cent of hands (assuming the contract arrived at is a good one but not a lay-down) rests on the first two plays. The importance of the opening lead has been stressed on innumerable occasions; the imagination and reasoning involved in it has been discussed at length.

But of almost equal moment is the second play in those cases where the defenders have retained the lead.

This is where the blind analysis of the opening lead must be either confirmed or revised, after consideration of the dummy, and partner's follow-suit card.

South, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1♡	Pass	2♡	Pass
4♡ (1)	Pass	Pass	Pass

(1) This jump to game was a "stretch." Three hearts, over the weak single raise, would have been more accurate. Then North would raise to game rather than hang a trick short, his previous raise having been unshaded.

West opened the club King and had East automatically signalled with a high card for a continuation, the contract would have been as good as made. But East realized that whatever club tricks the declarer had to lose could be taken later since they required no establishment; a spade trick, on the other hand, if one existed, had to be set up. And that, before dummy's diamonds were established!

So East played the deuce of clubs on the first lead, demanding a shift. West had no difficulty in choosing the proper shift: trumps and diamonds were patently out of the question. He therefore led the deuce of spades, and now declarer had no chance for his contract. Before he could clear away the Ace and King of diamonds the defenders had established their spade trick, for the setting trick.

Incidentally, West's second lead of the fourth-best spade told East, by a count of declarer's spades, which trick to cash (a spade or a club) when he finally took the lead with his diamond Ace.

Good Manners

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

I am to be matron of honor at a wedding and as the bride-to-be is a Canadian and I am Italian, I am at a loss to know what I am supposed to do. I feel greatly honored indeed and would not for anything make a mistake. B.

On the day of the wedding you come to the bride's home, to go from there to the church. She will at that time give you your bouquet, which is provided by her or her family, to harmonize with your costume. All details of your costume you provide for yourself, and according to the wishes of the bride.

In the processional you walk just befors the bride and her father. At the altar you hold the bride's bouquet during the ring part of the ceremony, passing your bouquet to the bridesmaid nearer you. As the bride and groom turn to go down the aisle for the recessional, you hand the bouquet back to the bride, and readjust her veil and train.

Beauty Answers

Question—Hearing so much about the new bobs, I went to—and had one. But I don't think this is so becoming to me. My face is long and thin and I'm not very tall, only 5 feet 1 inch. With a short haircut, the picture I make is anything but attractive, at least from my viewpoint. What do you think about this?

V. A., Lynn.

Answer—Anything that is not becoming, regardless of how new a mode it is, is never stylish. Let your hair grow until it can be cut differently. Arrange your coiffure in wide, natural waves, fluffing it about the face.

Question—Can you recommend a good home remedy that will close the pores? What can be done for lines around the eyes?

V. L., Brookline.

Answer—A good home made astringent lotion for closing the pores is the following: One part camphor, one part benzoins to ten parts witch hazel. For the lines around your eyes I would advise you to use any good, heavy nourishing cream.

Ford Sees Big Change

Rails to Be Mere Freight Lines

Henry Ford believes new inventions will come and change every-day life just as earlier ones have. His ideas are described in an interview on the eve of his 73rd birthday.

By W. W. CHAPLIN

Copyright, 1936, by Universal Service

Detroit, July 28 — Henry Ford believes that in the years to come inventive genius and industrial sagacity will carve out new glories and that many of today's troubles will be no more than tomorrow's memories.

In an interview just prior to his 73rd birthday anniversary the motor magnate told me something of his vision of the scientific future.

To obtain this interview, the only one he gave on this birthday occasion, I flew from New York in less than four hours, a journey that would have seemed a miracle even five years ago.

As we spoke of this flight and how today it was no longer considered even surprising that distances had been incredibly shortened by airlines, I asked him if he thought mechanical inventions would change everyday life in the years ahead as they have in the past.

Sitting in the engineering laboratory of his Dearborn plant Mr. Ford smiled at my question and replied:

More Inventions

"The surface of American inventive genius hasn't even been scratched as yet. Life will continue to adapt himself to the new conditions."

In a long conversation I sought to get from him some picture of this new life ahead, say 25 years from now or even at the end of the century.

Ford is a man who speaks slowly, almost haltingly, evidently thinking as he talks, and he had no ready-made word picture to hand me of what he believes life will be a quarter or a half a century from now.

But from his remarks I can piece together the following summary of his beliefs:

1—Present methods of transportation, such as the automobile and airplane, will be perfected to couple greater speed with greater safety.

2—The railroads will probably become mere heavy freight carriers and broad fast motor highways will be constructed on their rights of way.

3—Industry will come in take a more active part in the education of youth to participate in industry, fitting them during their school period to take jobs as soon as they are ready.

Concerning some of these points Ford elaborated to a certain extent. He said:

"There should be no unemployment. There is a large percentage of labor now which cannot make a living, because in many working groups wages are not high enough. That is industry's second job.

"The first job is to make a good product. The second job is to pay a good wage. It is always a sign of good management when a company finds out how to use men in a way that enables them to earn a living wage.

"What industry must do now is start at the beginning and train the country's youth, the children in school. As it is, thousands of youths come out of schools and colleges every year with no training for getting a job or holding it.

"We have a school here at Dearborn which helps them to discover their bent and trains them for jobs and when they come out they move right into jobs they are trained for."

I remarked that many industrialists and business men had been heard to complain that the government was moving steadily toward the left, even toward a dictatorship. Mr. Ford replied:

Ban on Dictators

"That's the way governments always move if they are not checked. We have a system of government that checks that.

"A democracy is a government by the people, and unless the people actually do take enough interest in their government to participate actively in it and direct its trend, then it ceases to be a democracy.

"The whole thing is up to the people; they'll get just what they want."

I asked if he really believed that railroads were doomed as a major means of transportation. He said:

"Not doomed. Nothing useful ever disappears. They have been given a brief new lease of life at the moment. But their future will probably be as heavy freight carriers.

"The other present means of passenger transportation, the automobile and the airplane, are yet to be developed to the point of perfection. Neither is complete as yet.

"That is always the way, perfection must be sought and then very likely some new invention exceeds the value of the perfected machine.

"The bicycle, for instance, was perfected and then the automobile came on the scene—but not until the bicycle was perfected. There are now more bicycles made than ever before.

"I have a feeling that the automobile will have to be completed before we will make fundamental advances in aviation. These things seem to grow out of each other.

"What new means of transportation may be invented I could not guess but at present the obvious task is to perfect what we have."

MILL PICKETED IN WORCESTER

Worcester, July 28—Finishers at the textile plant of the Bell Company, in Millbrook street, today made good their threat to strike and picket the place if all of its 1000 workers did not unionize.

More than 100 workers marched up and down the streets outside trying to persuade the rest of the employes to join them. A dozen police were sent to the scene as a precautionary measure.

There is no wage dispute, but leaders of the local of the United Textile Workers' Union insist that the entire plant be unionized.

Officials of factories adjoining the Bell plant asked and received extra police protection on the ground that some of the pickets and curious bystanders were trespassing on their properties.

Lost Boy Home

Back home once again today, Mitchell Louse, 11, of West Brookline street, South End, showed no ill effects from his 17 hours in the woods near Derry, N. N., after he became lost while picnicking.

Curley to Fix Hospital Blame in Radio Speech

Denying reports that he had definitely made up his mind to replace Dr. Winfred Overholser, commissioner of mental diseases, with Dr. John V. Thuot of New Bedford, Governor Curley today announced he would "place the blame" for the alleged condition of state hospitals in a radio address tomorrow evening.

Asked point blank if he was going to appoint Dr. Thuot, who is 71 and a general practitioner, to head the state department, the Governor said:

TO PLACE BLAME

"I haven't decided what to do about the department. I think the situation is pretty well straightened out as a result of the instructions I gave to Dr. Overholser yesterday in the council chamber to clean up the hospitals throughout the state.

"The floors at the Boston State Hospital in Mattapan ought to be scraped half an inch to remove the odors. I think at least half the beds ought to be burned. I have given instructions to see that there are plenty of towels, bed linen and rubber sheeting.

"Tomorrow, on the air, I am going to talk about conditions at the mental institutions and I am going to place the responsibility for conditions that exist."

SPENDING PLAN

Ordered to go ahead without regard for budget limitations, Dr. Overholser said he would remedy shortages at all the state hospitals at a cost which he estimated at $3,000,... over the budget allowance of $11,600,000.

The Governor may call a special session of the legislature to authorize borrowing for these additional funds. At the same time he is expected to press his previous proposals for a $10,000,000 building program.

Man Held on Theft Of War Vet Check

Sought two years for alleged theft of a veteran's check for $28.75 from Mrs. Jeannette Cox of Columbus square, South End, John J. Connolly, a seaman, was held in $1,000 today for a hearing before U. S. Commissioner Howard W. Robbins in Federal court.

The check was sent Mrs. Cox as insurance payment for her brother, Connolly took it while visiting the Cox house it is charged.

LABOR EXPECTS NEW SHIP WAR

Washington, July 28 (AP)—Reports that trouble was brewing in the maritime labor situation prompted Labor Department officials today to prepare to intervene at the first outbreak.

Edward F. McGrady, assistant secretary and the administration's labor "trouble-shooter," declined all invitations to make Labor Day speeches for fear he would be needed on the Pacific Coast at that time.

The conciliation service kept in close touch with agents in the principal ports of both East and West coasts.

Wage and hour agreements between Pacific Coast sailors and longshoremen and their employers expire September 25. Negotiations toward new ones are slated to start 30 days before the old pacts expire.

Protest Oil Farm

Residents of South Boston are expected to throng next Friday's public hearing before State Fire Marshal Stephen J. Garrity to protest against the petition to establish a 3,500,000-gallon oil farm in East First street.

Bowling Alley Builder Is Dead

Brockton, July 28—George E. Peabody, 69 of 253 High street, Medford, specialist on bowling alley construction, was found dead in his room at the Hotel Lincoln, West Elm street, today of heart disease. Peabody, who had gained a national reputation for his construction of bowling alleys, came to this city some five weeks ago to supervise the construction of the alleys in the American Legion building.

THIS IS LIFE

By Robert E. Rogers

Now that the newspapers have had time to collect the editorial comments on Governor Landon's acceptance speech of last Thursday evening, it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that its appeal to the average responsible man and woman was profound.

ROBERT E. ROGERS

Newspapers are frequently partisan in matters political, but they are also pretty shrewd judges of sentiment, and even those writers whose newspapers are most firmly committed to the New Deal—which is not the same thing as the Democratic party — had to admit either tacitly or outright that the speech had a wide popular appeal.

The fact is that the dominant American type, the largest in numbers, the most widely distributed over the country, the most characteristic and the most influential, is the Business Man. Not the largely imaginary "Economic Royalty" whom the President in terms of high exaggeration sees as typical.

Average Business Man Most Typical

The most typical American figure is not the man of great wealth or of vast business enterprise; he is not the engineer, the expert or the technician; not the literary man who seeks to be the mouthpiece of the less articulate millions; not the unskilled laborer; not even the farmer.

He is the average business man. By business man, I mean not merely one who owns and operates an independent, however modest, enterprise. He may be an employe of a considerable business, an executive of considerable responsibility and remuneration. Or he may be in the lower ranks, even a skilled workman of the sort who accepts the laws of business and expects by following them to better his financial and social condition.

These men and women—and they are literally legion—are the most characteristic and typical Americans. They are laborious, conscientious, responsible, and there are in them certain inherited and ingrained convictions, so profound as to have the validity of mathematical axioms which no a priori theories about the proper conduct of life can shake.

This type of character will try anything promising once. It will give ideas a chance to prove themselves. In the past it has tested and assimilated many social ideas of which at first it was very suspicious. Those that have turned out workable it has adopted and now gives them a genuine loyalty. But in spite of its open mind, of its inherent inclination toward the belief that the world can be made better for us all, it still insists that the proof of the pudding is in the eating, and that experiments that do not seem to "jell" cannot be pursued too long without danger.

Landon Is Called "Business-Like"

In an inexact and tentative way the American people have grasped the idea that Governor Landon has been a business-like politician.

They have grasped the idea that he has been precise in his objectives, liberal in his policies, thrifty in his use of public monies, balanced in his methods,—and—oh, what's the use! I mean that people are beginning to feel that he is "business-like." The word sums it all up.

Our people probably do not understand the word "statesmanlike" so well. They do not understand it. They are afraid it involves assumptions beyond their experience. But they do understand the word "business-like." And at this period it is my belief that our people feel the need of that in government more than anything else.

Governor Landon is not a good orator. He is not a fine stylist, an easy rhetorician, I suspect he finds a certain difficulty in expressing himself. Probably that is why he sacrifices every grace of the orator to the basic and difficult task of getting the thing said as plainly and simply and clearly as he can say it.

Language of Average Man Held Important

Certain of his propositions were more forthright and dangerous for a politician than anything that has been said publicly for a long time. I think that even those who disagreed with him felt the significance of that fact.

The essential type which we call the "business man" outnumbers every other in the United States. I suspect that most of them were listening in to him the other evening. I suspect also that his way of expressing a familiar and trusted point of view, in the language of the average man, will prove to be the most important influence in this campaign.

Holy Land Exhibit Taxes Capacity

PRAISE KEEN FOR BIBLICAL SHOW

The one-week extended stay of the Holy Land exhibit at Horticultural Hall is being appreciated by residents of Boston and New England, if last night's crowd is any criterion of the interest in this unusual evening's entertainment.

The exhibit, now in its fifth and last week in Boston, is being shown here for the benefit of the Christmas Basket Fund of the Boston Evening American-Boston Sunday Advertiser.

The exhibit was held over a week longer than planned by Joseph and Salvatore Gauci, at the request of the Bos on Evening American and Boston Sunday Advertiser in answer to the pleas of clergymen representing all races and creeds.

Throughout yesterday afternoon and last night Horticultural Hall was taxed to capacity by those who took advantage of the extended week's stay. At one time an extra detail of traffic officers had to be sent to Massachusetts and Huntington avenues to handle the crowds of motorists and pedestrians anxious to view the work of the two men who devoted 11 years to the task of building the exhibit.

MECHANICAL MARVEL

The mechanical marvel of the two brothers depicts the life of Christ and pictures of the Holy Land as it appeared during Christ's 33 years on earth.

During the week several religious orders throughout New England operating boys' and girls schools are planning to give their charges an outing in Boston so that they may number themselves as among those who had an opportunity to see the Holy Land exhibit.

In the rush to visit the Holy Land exhibit, during the final few days of its stay in Boston, visitors are not ceasing their expressions of praise, wonder and satisfaction after viewing the masterpiece of pictorial, mechanical and electrical ingenuity. One would image that all expressions in both English and foreign languages to describe the impression created by the marvel had been exhausted but still they continue to pour in voluntarily. Said William J. Kearse, of 200 Market street, Brighton:

"This exhibit of the Holy Land is as good as a trip to Palestine. The creative genius of the brothers who made it could hardly be equaled. It is a scene both inspiring and devotional and surely must be pleasing to the Lord, whose land is portrays so admirably.

"To see it," said Miss Blanche Narracott, of 11 Norway street, "is something gained for those in every walk of life."

Raymond Smith, of 9 Kendall street, a member of the Church of God and Saints of Christ, declared he is deriving a biblical education from viewing the exhibit. He said:

AN EDUCATION

"I have the pleasure of reading two chapters of the Bible every Sabbath, and having read through it once and more than half the second time, I have read every article that was presented by your exhibit, which I think is wonderful and deserves much credit."

Mrs. Margaret Glavin of 8 Adams terrace, Cambridge, declared:

"It is something I will never forget and everyone should see it to appreciate it."

Pardon Sought for 23-Year Fugitive

Cleveland, July 28 (AP) Prosecutor Ferry A. Frey said today he would place no charge against Calvin B. Chilton unless requested by the governor of Oklahoma, where Chilton, 23 years ago, walked away from a reformatory while serving two years for a burglary.

Frey said he awaited a reply to a telegram he sent the Oklahoma executive last night, proposing a pardon for Chilton

COOLENS ALL SET

Pick Malden and Everett's Glad

The Coolens are out of the Malden City Infirmary, but not out of Malden.

It appears they like Malden better than Everett and that is O. K with the Everett authorities, but does not please Malden.

While Everett was paying $15 a day for the board of the family of 10 at the Malden Infirmary, Malden did not complain. But Everett did.

Judge Davis continued the non support case to Aug. 15 when he will check on developments.

LOOKING FOR HOUSE

The Coolens are looking at a house here in Malden and I think they are going to rent it," added Attorney E. J. Hoffman, who represents Clifford M. Coolen.

"Malden doesn't want them to stay in Malden," said Welfare Agent George C. McKinnon.

But Judge Elbridge G. Davis disregarded the statement.

Judge Davis yesterday had ordered Coolen to "find a house in Everett" and to get out of the infirmary.

Three weeks ago the family was evicted from their home in Malden and as they had been deemed an Everett responsibility, Everett found them a home, but Mrs. Coolen refused point-blank to take it. And so they went to the Malden City Infirmary—at $15 a day.

CHARGE WORKS

As the cost rolled up, Everett finally decided to charge Coolen with non-support of his family—although he has a job.

This maneuver appeared to have brought about a satisfactory settlement of the puzzling case today—that is, satisfactory for Everett and Mr. and Mrs. Coolen and their eight children.

Judge Davis continued the non support case to Aug. 15 when he will check on developments.

Dies After Seeing Mate's Grave

London, July 28 (AP)—For 20 years Mrs. Rosina Kemp of Calgary, Canada had told her friends "When I have seen my husband's grave at Vimy Ridge I shall be prepared to die."

She fulfilled her wish Sunday as one of 100 pilgrims to the unveiling of the Canadian war memorial on the blood soaked heights of Vimy. Then she boarded the steamer Antonia at Le Havre. Four hours later she was dead of a heart attack.

Hypnosis Kills Childbirth Pain

DOCTOR HAILS NEW METHOD AS SUCCESS

Columbus, O., July 28 (US)—The use of hypnosis in bringing women through childbirth so that they are entirely oblivious to pain today was hailed as a new method which may be widely used by obstetricians.

Dr. A. H. Kanter, Columbus physician, revealed he had delivered Mrs. Leonard Loomis of a 10½-pound baby girl after lulling the mother to sleep with hypnotism three times during her labor.

Declaring he believed his experiment the first in the country, although he knew the method was practiced successfully in Russia Dr. Kanter said:

"I think it will have a marvelous future. You never realize until you see it what a miracle it is."

Dr. Kanter said several methods are used in making the hypnosis complete, all of them in the form of quiet conversation inducing the subject to fall into a deep sleep. He described the experiment:

"I first put Mrs. Loomis under for about ½ hours, but when I took her out she carried on so I put her back under again for about an hour and a half.

"She was out from under the influence for about half an hour and I again hypnotized her and then had to use my instruments to complete the delivery.

"She knew nothing as to what was going on and could not remember a thing after the delivery. She didn't even know she had the baby until it was brought to her."

Dr. Kanter said he studied the theory of hypnosis with Dr. Fred Brown psychiatrist formerly with the Boston City Hospital, who conducted a department in connection with the Wilson Foundation.

Dr. Kanter said he had also had used the method in cases with good results and in its increases and in similar cases now accompanied by pain.

Mrs. Loomis and the baby, Shirley Marie, are in fair condition both doing well.

A long procession followed the body to its final resting place in New Calvary cemetery.

Friends relatives and school comrades crowded the church and a huge floral tribute in the shape of a football for the star halfback of the Revere High team, was placed on the casket.

Rev. John H Cosgrove celebrated the high mass of requiem. Pallbearers were John and Robert Mannix, John Runes and Fred Nedwine.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN

By Marjorie McBride

If you're interested in those hilarious contests that are sweeping the country, you may have time for a new goofy one introduced here today by Girl-About-Town. Are you good at parodies?

The idea is based on "Knock, Knock, Who's There?" a current song hit. In this ditty, the catch line is the title:

"Knock, Knock Who's There It goes . . . On to Oscar Who' . . . Oscar if she go a for you' In another stanza, the answer is 'Hiram . . . Hiram Who' . . . Hiram I don't believe' . . . Not Lonesome . . . "Knock, Knock, Who's There?"... and then, 'Tarzan . . . Tarzan Who" . . . Tarzan Stripes Forever."

MARJORIE McBRIDE

Get the idea? Mention a name and then pun on it . . . it needn't be a perfect pun, either . . . in fact, the balmier the better. The meter is seven syllables. Send your contributions to Marjorie McBride. Authors of punches printed will receive $2 each.

Other samples of this new form of Spoofing are . . . Knock, Knock, Who's There? Win . . . Win Who? Win it's cocktail time in Maine . . . Knock, Knock, Who's There? Camphor . . . Camphor get the night I met you.

One could go on all night. Some have, I understand, though they've never been the same again. Anyway, it will serve to take your mind off the heat . . . or that postponed vacation.

Bay State Society Girls Take to Dude Ranch Life

Dude ranching is being taken up more seriously than ever before by Boston society people. Marjorie Motley, sub-deb daughter of the E. Preble Motleys of Hamilton, is learning how to ride cowboy fashion and throw the rope on a ranch in Wyoming. Also in Wyoming are Marie Turner of Beverly Farms and her mother, Mrs. Lee Frothingham. And Dorothy West, daughter of the George S. Wests of Chestnut Hill, is learning all about cinch bits and chaps and the rest of it on another guest ranch somewhere west of the Great Divide.

Mrs George Wahn has varied the program by going to a regular grazing ranch in Oregon, where the cowhands spend more time riding herd and mending fence than in strumming mandolins. Her host gets his money out of beef not boarders. Mr. Wahn will join her there later in the season.

Foe of Jackson Chopped Head Off Constitution

Even oldest inhabitants who have boarded the Constitution many times don't know that on the night of July 2, 1834, a Falmouth sea captain rowed out to the ship as she lay near Charlestown Bridge and chopped off the upper part of the figurehead, which was intended to represent Andrew Jackson, then President of the United States.

The Falmouth skipper was Samuel W. Dewey, an ardent Whig, and a foe of Jackson and all his works. He particularly resented the fact that Captain Jesse E. Elliott had anchored the ship facing the city, which was against sea custom. The incident is recalled in a handsome booklet just put out by the Cape Cod Advancement Plan.

Other discount coupons entitled them make the round trip to and from Nantasket for a ten-cent piece. Mothers and relatives, too, were able to make the boat-trip at a cost next to nothing.

GIRL OUTBOARD DRIVERS ENTER RACES

Mr. Boston Sharkey Drives in Training

By JACK CONWAY

JACK SHARKEY is displaying as much spirit getting ready for his ten-round bout with Joe Louis at the Yankee Stadium, New York, on August 18, as he did as he fought his way to the world's championship. Sharkey has had the assistance of half a dozen rugged sparring partners as he has gone through the preliminary stages of the training grind.

Mr. Boston

"Training is always hard for a boxer," said Sharkey, "but with the years I have learned more about the art of conditioning myself for a severe ring test. I have always liked a month or two of hard work before a bout. I am able to map out my program, and I gradually come up to fighting edge.

"I shall continue to work in Boston through Friday. I shall leave for New York on Saturday or Sunday, and will probably entrench at Orangeburg, N. Y. I trained there for most of my winning bouts in New York, and I like the place. It has splendid indoor and outdoor training equipment.

"I now weigh 206 pounds, but will be well under 200 pounds when I collide with Louis.

* * *

Title Bout

"With Max Schmeling definitely matched to clash with Jimmy Braddock in a title bout at the Garden Bowl at Long Island, New York between September 24 and 30, I am naturally more eager than ever to beat Louis. If I win, I know I shall get first crack at the victor of the Schmeling-Braddock tussle next year.

"I have always had Schmeling's number, and can beat him any time we start. I can also outscore Braddock.

"First, though, I must clear the Louis hurdle. I shall get myself into the best possible condition, and am confident I shall win.

"I was particularly pleased at the way I went during the last few rounds of my bout with Phil Brubaker. I boxed at a faster speed than I had in the earlier rounds, and halted Brubaker short every time he attempted to rally."

When Sharkey leaves for New York, he will be accompanied by Johnny Buckley who has directed him in all of his ring battles.

$401,879 Handle

THE RECORD Monday handle of $401,879 at Suffolk Downs bears out any contention that racing interest is still booming. The fact there was not any Monday ball game helped, but it also required real racing interest to send the mutuel handle soaring to such heights.

There are 16 more days of racing at Suffolk Downs, and I look for the mutuel handle to go along merrily. It is likely to set a daily average of over $400,000 for the 53 days of the meeting.

There has been plenty of good racing at the East Boston track. The favorites have won more than their share of races, while other good horses, often overlooked by the bettors in making the favorites, have shown real racing form. The fast time set by most of the winners is best proof of the high type of racing that has been offered the public at Suffolk Downs.

Daily Double

WALTER O'Hara, with a genius for publicity, stepped into the headlines again when he announced that the the summer meeting at Narragansett Park, which opens on August 15, the daily double will be decided on the first and second races. This move, says O'Hara, was the result of requests from fans who have sought quicker action.

The new system will also help the regular betting on the third race. Daily double players, who have a winning horse in the first race, often wait until the third race is part of the way before they make another wager.

There are already 300 horses quartered at Narragansett, and everything is going ahead in splendid style for the opening of the summer season. There are thousands of healthy vacationists in the numerous Rhode Island summer resorts, and they will pour thousands of dollars in the mutuel machines at the Pawtucket track.

Harry Morrissey and his crew of assistants are busy already at the track, and are schooling horses each morning.

Billy Arnell tells me that Beefsteak, six-year-old gelding which broke down badly at Santa Anita last winter, is at Narragansett, and is rounding into form under the direction of Sol Rutchick.

Jockey Roy King, who was recently injured at Suffolk Downs, will be discharged from the hospital next Monday, and will be back riding in two months. His brother, C. King, has joined the list of jockeys at Suffolk Downs.

MIDGET Class Draws STARS

PRIZES NOW ON DISPLAY

By CAPTAIN CUTWATER

The girls, as well as the masculine pilots, are going to show their speed on the big Charles River outboard motor boat regatta this Saturday and Sunday.

Officials of the Boston Evening American and Sunday Advertiser races announced today that an entry has been received from [illegible] famous outboard driver from Towson, Md.

Miss Codd, the only woman professional speed boat pilot in the country, has entered a Class A boat which she will drive herself, and another of her sault craft will compete, in Class B with Philip Gore at its helm.

The Maryland beauty got a second and a third in the Boston races a year ago, matching paces with the best of the men professionals in the final heat of her event she was threatening C. Mulford Scull, Ventnor, Pa. pro, who finally won top money, when her motor "conked out" and she was unable to finish.

A sister team from Chestnut Hill, Pa., which is expected to swamp other competitors in the midget division is composed of Mollie and Elsie Tyson, midget champs at Boston last August.

The fair sisters are part of the famous family of racing Tysons, all of who will be on hand for the American-Advertiser regatta. Tommy Tyson, former intercollegiate title-holder, will probably compete in several Division I races, and their father, Thomas Tyson, Sr., is a national official who will take charge of cruising motor and boats to see they are within the rules.

A leading feminine competitor of a year ago, Miss Mary Chapman, daughter of Charles F. Chapman, national outboard referee and editor of Motor Boating magazine will be unable to race here, as she is in Europe this summer.

From Albany, however, it is expected that Mrs. Audrey Orear will be on hand to take another fling at the midget contest. Her husband, Stan Orear, is an amateur racer in Class A.

The midget class, though using the smallest motors of any in sanctioned competition, usually provides the most interesting contests fast year, in the first American-Advertiser races, Mollie Tyson set a new speed record of 27.173 miles an hour with her little craft.

On Saturday afternoon, the first day of the regatta, the first of four heats will get under way at 3 o'clock. After the [illegible] amateur and professionals [illegible] off four heats. As in all amateur events, the prizes will be awarded on points.

In addition to a number of prizes, the glittering assembly of silverware, jewelry, furniture, radios and clocks, worth in all more than $1000, went on display this afternoon in the window of Ampico Hall on Boylston street. The prizes are considered the most handsome and costly ever given at any outboard regatta.

Commodore Stanley W. Ferguson of the Central New England Regatta Association, which will take charge of the regatta, brought back word from the weekend races at Lake George, New York, that at least seven crafts in the 225 cubic inch inboard class will come to Boston this weekend for the racing on the Charles.

Topping the list is the mammoth speedster Snail, which won two straight heats on Saturday for the Lake George title. This streamlined hydroplane is owned by George C. Cannon of New Rochelle, N. Y., but in her races the veteran speed driver, Hugh Gingras, takes the wheel.

Roslindale Meets Jordan's Team

The Roslindale Town Club, after scoring one of the biggest upsets in years in twilight baseball by conquering the Gardens in the first round of the Boston Park League playoffs, will face the champion Jordan's in the first game of their semifinal series.

The retailers, marking time since last week when their took three out of four from the Madden Club of Roxbury in the preliminary round, will send Frank Callahan to the mound at Field's Corner against the Bailey outfit.

On the other side of the division-al circuit Teddy Donovan's Wolf Club, one up on Dick Casey's Neponset outfit as a result of winning th first game of their semifinal series at Neponset last night 5-2, will shoot Lefty Tom Quigley against the Dorchester solon.

Casey will counter with a southpaw, Charley O'Hara in the second game of their series at Fallon Field in Roslindale tonight.

Aces of Outboards Plan for Hearst Regatta

Pirates Due Here for 4 Games

By JOE CASHMAN

Our Bees hope the second and final day of their vacation proves as enjoyable and profitable as did the first day. While they were riding away Wash Day in perfect weather, they picked up a half game on the fourth-place Pittsburgh Pirates, who were beaten in Brooklyn, and held their own with the Giants and Reds, both of whom were also idle.

The Pirates, now only 3½ games away, invade the Hive tomorrow for a four-game series, starting with a mid-week doubleheader. "Dizzen Dainty" MacFayden, seeking his 11th win, and the amazing Bobby Smith will do the Bees flinging.

It is hoped that Baxter Jordan will be able to don a uniform and go up to pinch-hit, if necessary, when the Bees swing back into action tomorrow. By Sunday "Buck" should be back at his first-base post.

Paul "Daffy" Dean sends the Cardinals' pennant stock crashing to a new low by announcing that he'll ask to be placed on the voluntary retired list for the remainder of the season. Bothered by a sore arm for several weeks, the younger of the Demon Deans reached the decision to call it "quits" for the year after he had been pounded by the Fisher Shoe Co. in an exhibition game at Randolph last night.

Eric McNair, Red Sox infielder, is in town hobbling about with a sore knee. Dr. Eddie O'Brien, personal physician of the Fenway flock, took an X-ray of the injury and said "Booby" should be ready to play when his mates return next week.

Manager Bill McKechnie was more than satisfied with the showing of Guy Bush in his Bees bow and plans to start the veteran thin man against his former Pirate mates during the series

Frankie Frisch can't understand how "Rabbit" Warstler came to be waived out of the American League. "I haven't seen any better shortstopping in years than Warstler played against us over the week-end," says the Cards' Pilot.

BACK AGAIN. Miss Mollie Tyson of the famed Tyson family from Chestnut Hill, Penn., who are all well known for their outboard achievements, will again participate in the Hearst regatta sponsored by the Boston Evening Sunday Advertiser. Last year she set a new record in the midget class by averaging 21.173 miles per hour.

Cronin Back to Bolster Red Sox

St. Louis, July 28—With their string of four straight victories broken, the Red Sox hope to return to winning ways this afternoon when they resume their series with Rogers Hornsby's pesky Browns.

Jim Henry, the rookie Boston hurler, did not have quite enough yesterday, and the Sox suffered their first defeat in five games, but today they hope for much better things.

Manager Joe Cronin has arrived back on the scene and will immediately inject himself into the lineup. His return is certain to add batting punch to the club. This does not, however, mean that Johnny Kroner, the sensational rookie who has been batting close to .500 since the Sox went on the road, will be benched.

Kroner will move over to second base and Oscar Melillo will join Eric McNair on the bench. The combination of Cronin and Kroner may lack defensive smoothness, but they will more than balance this weakness with their batting.

Lefty Ostermueller is expected to win the mound assignment. The Red Sox southpaw has not started a game since the Cleveland series and has had plenty of rest. He will work today and Cronin will follow with Marcum tomorrow, saving Grove and Wes Ferrell for the Chicago series.

There will probably be one other change in the Sox starting lineup.

Entries for the fourth Hearst Junior golf championship of New England passed the 300 mark today and rolled merrily on as the juniors rushed to get in on the greatest of all-time tournaments.

The tournament, slated to open next Monday with a qualifying round at the Wachusett Country Club, includes four medal play sessions. Sixteen boys from each of these tests enter the match play finals at Sandy Burr the latter part of next month.

The Wachusett round still remained in the doubtful stage today, but a fresh flow of entries from the area made it likely the round would go on as scheduled.

If a sufficient number of entries is not forthcoming from the Worcester-Vermont-western part of the state sector, boys from the area will be shifted to other clubs for qualification. This move would be made to prevent unfairness to boys at the other three qualifying points, where fields of more than 200 will compete.

Blue Hill Country Club on August 10, Merrimack Valley Country Club on August 13, and Metacomet Golf Club on August 17 are the other three qualifying points.

The entry blank for the tournament, and the list of towns eligible for entrants to represent at each qualifying round, are printed elsewhere on this page.

There is absolutely no entry fee for this Hearst New England junior championship.

Get in on this competition now, junior golfers. The field will be full, but with medal qualifying tests, anyone who can shoot golf at all has at least a chance to get into the match play finals.

So FILL OUT YOUR ENTRY BLANK NOW, junior golfer. You'll have the time of your life, in this sparkling links classic

Bowser to Import New Irish Giant To Succeed Danno

HOPING TO STIR THE LAGGING pulses of local wrestling addicts, Paul Bowser, the mat maestro, is planning to import another Irish strong man to replace Danno O'Mahony when he renews his autumn productions. This one is named Dan, though it might be Pat. Casey and hails from a rural peat plantation in the West of the vernal Isle, where they say the males grow tall, rugged and leathery and the girls are tender, gorgeous and loving-O.

Austen Lake

Casey, if they don't alter his name to something else for publicity purposes, is reported to be one of the legendary types, 230 pounds in the raw and 6-feet-three in his socks, and able to snap a whiffle tree with a single flick of his wrists.

It means that Danno Mahony, who acquired the O before his name when he was uncrated on Boston's docks a year and a half ago, will be demoted to the position of wheel horse and general stooge, as Gus Sonnenberg and Ed Don George were in their respective times.

And I am hearing that Danno plans to come back in October for a short tour, chiefly for a clean-up match with Yvon Robert, after which he will ship for home again to set up a Trust of his own, and realize his dream of "owning a castle on a high rock," as his publicity agents used to say in their typewritten blurbs which they mailed around to the sport pages.

* * *

BRAWN PLUS MALE BEAUTY

CASEY, I HEAR, IS THE BIGGEST and burliest Irishman the Bowser agents could uncover in their tour of the country. They wanted one this time who had hawser muscles, bony masculine angles, and who could whoosh and heave more realistically than young Danno did in his first apprentice matches with the Dusek brothers.

This will take more delicate doing than when Danno was unpacked, pretty crude and clumsy, as an indentured apprentice to Bowser on the December 11 afternoon of 1934. The kid, though strapping, was bewildered and innocent of the mat arts. So they put him to work in a roomy horse stable on Bowser's Framingham estate, where Professor Freddy Moran, Johnny Spellman and others taught him the first refinements of the craft and invented the Irish whip as his trade hold.

Yet Danno looked very naive in his inaugural match with Ernie Dusek, the baby of the Dusek wrestling family, and Ernie was put to some pains to slip back into the holds that he slipped out of and make Danno look as he had been advertised in the daily papers.

* * *

BOWSER MUST RECAPTURE SKEPTICS

BUT THE LOYAL ARMY, who stormed the gates of the Garden when Danno was making his early triumphal march through the lop-eared and fungus-skinned veterans of the mat, dwindled gradually as skepticism grew within the ranks. The Trust overdid Danno's dramatics and suspicions arose that Danno, who was a lithe, lean and placid youth, couldn't be that good and still be made of mere meat, blood and bones like other mortal people.

And when finally, last March, a renegade wrestler named Dick Shikat beat him about the base of the brain and wrenched his Jumbo into pretzel knots, Danno wound up sobbing on his stomach and Shikat lammed out West with the family jewels.

This hit the local Trust a terrific belt in the region of the box office, and from then on Danno faded as an attraction until, for safety sake, the remnants of his title was handed to Yvon Robert and Danno was allowed to go home to Ballydehob with his earnings, which rumor says is something under $30,000.

* * *

MAT GAME IN DEPLORABLE STATE

IN BRINGING ANOTHER IRISH WRESTLER over to salvage Danno's old following, the Trust wants someone who can meet the mat's high standard of savagery and soak up kicks in the features, gouges about the eyes and clouts to the jaw without having to baby the shots.

Casey, so the story goes, is large, muscular and boisterous enough to make the illusion seem sound, and he is said to have just that level type of chin and bland blue eye to make him nothing less than first in the hearts of his countrymen.

The wrestling industry is now in a frazzled state, with four world's champions, including Abe Levin, Hebrew who works the metropolitan purlieus of New York; Yvon Robert, the French-Canadian who is recognized in New England; Vincent Lopez, a half-breed Mexican who is No. 1 on the Coast, and Everett Marshall, who is variously described as an Anglicized Lith, Pole, with a mixture of Scotch English, who works the Middle West.

This lamentable condition, I feel sure, would not have happened if Bowser had not come down with gallstones and intestinal twinges just before Shikat kidnaped Danno's title and, in turn, was sued in the Columbus, O., courts. Being a tactful man and a shrewd manipulator with sugar, Paul would have ransomed the title back again, or stalked Shikat into some Western jungle town and wrenched it loose by force. But he certainly wouldn't have gone to law and exposed the Industry's full larcenous record to the public prints. But being a patient man with a limber intellect, he will start sorting the pieces of the wreck this fall and turn up something sensational, like Dan Casey, to recapture the skeptics.

BROWN Continues STRIKE

RIVALS MARVEL AT U. S. CREW

Berlin, July 28 (US)—The University of Washington's eight-oared crew, victim of its own popularity until now, used its own shell, the "Husky Clipper," for the first time at Grunau and amazed onlookers with its skill and power.

An excited spectator at Saturday's big welcome had pounded a gaping hole in the hull with an over-enthusiastic fist, compelling the American Olympic hopes and favorites to work two days in a borrowed German boat with abbreviated slides.

However, apparently fully recovered from all attacks of seasickness, the husky oarsmen sped over the long river in two long workouts that indicated their preparedness for the Olympic battle.

Meanwhile, the entire rowing colony, aligned in fourteen boathouses opposite the 200 feet, 50-meter grandstand of 20,000 capacity, marveled at the flawless form and dazzling speed of the American crew. Don Hume, suffering from a cold today, nevertheless stroked the boat.

Share Berths

The Americans and Germans share one of the boathouses, which is more or less completely labelled with Nazi and American flags facing each other.

Japan's stubby eight startled the Americans with their technique this morning. They were passing the boathouse, rowing at a steady beat of 37 when the coxswain screamed suddenly, giving a command which they answered by doubling their clip to 38 in two strokes. They whizzed past the boathouse, slapping the water like a flock of ducks trying to rise.

Australia's rugged shell from Sydney has improved. America's coach Al Ulbrickson more than any of the other foreign crews present, including Argentina, Canada and Brazil. Brazil has created an embarrassing situation for Olympic authorities by sending two eights here with credentials from conflicting organizations. The official Brazilian entry will be determined by the International Olympic committee.

The arrival of the Swiss, Italian and English crews is awaited with interest.

River steamers, churning over the course, occasionally evoked shouts from the American oarsmen, but the uncomprehending passengers waved back friendly greetings.

Ellison "Tarzan" Brown, the Narragansett Indian marathoner, continued his training strike today because his trainer, coach Farrington had not been admitted to the Olympic village. On the request of coach Lawson Robertson, however, he jogged 15 miles to Berlin to mail a letter.

Meanwhile official concern was felt for Glenn Cunningham who today was limping about with a pair of sore legs.

He declared that he was bothered with sharp pains in both calves and that he was fearful lest the ailment descend to his ankles. He ascribed the condition to the unsatisfactory condition of the Olympic village track on which he has been working out.

Tomorrow the International Olympic committee is scheduled to meet and to elect two American members and to decide on the location of the next set of games. It is believed they will go to Japan although Finland is waging an active contest for the honor.

The boys of Ward 24, Dorchester, will have a real treat at the National League baseball Park on Thursday when they will witness the baseball game between the Braves and the Pirates as the guests of City Councilor Sidney Rosenberg.

It originally was carded for July 16, moved to July 30 and then to August 6. Now Tony thinks he can't be ready to fight before September.

RACE BOARD DOCTOR TESTS ALL WINNERS

By Walter Kiley

Whenever a long shot comes tearing down the home stretch to pay a fancy price for victory, whenever a horse going postward rears and bucks and otherwise acts fractious, there is always someone in the crowd to set up the shout, "That horse is doped."

The public—which, after all, keeps racing alive—has heard so many whispered rumors of doping, of the use of narcotics to stimulate horses to winning efforts, that it is only natural that constant repetition convinces them that "where there's fire there's smoke."

That the insinuation is false that dope is a common occurrence.

In order to [illegible] the truth to doubters whether the practice is prevalent and the rumors numerous being taken to task by Massachusetts tracks of late [illegible] we spent an entire afternoon in the company of Dr. Eugene W. Bradley at Suffolk Downs.

When this experienced expert with his background of more than 10 years as owner, trainer, Grand Circuit driver and then veterinarian, emphatically declares that doping horses in Massachusetts is as rare as to become a must consistent on state regulations as was that most of the talk of pure and adulterated "hunk," and offers conclusive proof to back up his statements, then it behooves one to listen in carefully.

"We have taken the saliva test of every winner of every race since Suffolk Downs opened last year. We did the same at Agawam, both under the direction of the Massachusetts racing commission," Bradley states.

"In addition, we took tests of other horses at the suggestion of stewards or at our own discretion wherever there appeared to be anything suspicious.

Test Winners

"We have averaged about nine tests a day, close to 1000 in all, since we started the tests here at Suffolk Downs.

Cleveland, O., July 28 (US)—The discovery of strychnine in a saliva test on Henry Freiberg's Bolo forced stewards at Thistledown race track to withdraw all track privileges permanently from Arthur F. Lloyd of Louisville, Ky., trainer of the horse.

The stewards also recommended to the Ohio State Racing Commission that Lloyd's license be revoked.

RED WAGON WILSON'S BEST BET

SPRINT Star in FOURTH

TUTTICURIO IN THIRD

By DAVE WILSON
(Selections for fast track)

BEST—RED WAGON, FOURTH

Suffolk Downs, July 28 —S. Sands' Red Wagon, a sterling second to All Forlorn in last outing, appears as the safest betting hazard of the eight-race card here today. Red Wagon should beat the field down to contest the fourth heat, a $3500 top and $3000 bottom claimer.

FIRST RACE

Notice Me, Forced Landing, Prince Danby

Stinging close with NOTICE ME in this wall open affair. This plater displayed excellent form in placing to Maple Mist only a few days back. FORCED LANDING ducked down a cend to win in his much easier spot. PRINCE DANBY is a prime real close on top form

SECOND RACE

Swift Flash, Grayson entry, Bugle Ann

If SWIFT FLASH is ever going to graduate it should surely happen here. The Pike colorbearer, on top form, merits standout figures over indifferent opposition. TOOTH-PICK and OPPORTUNE, which will run coupled as the C. T. GRAYSON ENTRY, figure to have a strong shot at the honors. BUGLE ANN, second to Eastport figures next to it on the strength of that near record endeavor

THIRD RACE

Tutticurio, Fake, Strange Times

TUTTICURIO pulled too highly in recent endeavors needs only to put forth a best effort to lead this shifty lot of $1600 platers under the imaginary wire. FAKE stepped six furlongs in 1:11 4-5 grubbing $1250 top and bottom company only a few days back. Sire figures dangerous despite stepping up the class ladder. STRANGE TIMES will appreciate the abbreviated route and may come up the good thing

FOURTH RACE

Red Wagon, Westys Junior, Danohan

RED WAGON will have WESTYS JUNIOR to down for the honors. The latter won four out of five starts at Detroit including a $3000 added handicap DANCING DOLL. Figures next best at the weights.

FIFTH RACE

Postscript, Ourush, Sandwrack

POSTSCRIPT, on general form, shapes up as a logical choice to the group of $2,500 platers. Chasing may be furnished by ONRUSH. The latter won a six furlong affair, dash going over the track Saturday. SANDWRACK figures next best in this event as a recent setback to Plucky Pip.

SIXTH RACE

Midshipman, Flying Dere, Old Field

MIDSHIPMAN encountered sharp early interference at the break in his most recent endeavor and that effort should be tossed into the ash can. FLYING DERE, the main danger, has turned in sharp performances in her last two outings. OLD FIELD is a possibility off the recent second to Golden Septre.

SEVENTH RACE

Blessed Event, Zembla, Rocky Prince

Toss out BLESSED EVENT—last one and he stands right out in the light over indifferent opposition of the sort ZEMBLA is likely to encounter. RUSTY MARKET seemed to outrun Kurdair last trip, may furnish the most contention.

Athletics To Train In Mexico City

Granville Needs 1 Win For Honors

New York, July 28 (AP)—Wm. Woodward's Granville needs to win just one more race to become the leading three-year old money winner of the current season

The son of Gallant Fox victory in the Arlington classic boosted his 1936 earnings to $65,550, only a few dollars short of the $66,800 won by Morton L. Schwartz' Bold Venture which won the Kentucky Derby and Preakness before bowing a leg.

Hal Price Headley's filly Apogee was setting the pace in the last mile and a sixteenth with 2,000 easily due to her victory in the Lake Stakes at the Chicago track. The Juvenile division probably will be revived within the next few weeks, however, as the rich Arlington futurity is scheduled for Saturday, while Saratoga, with its many attractive stakes for two-year-olds, opens tomorrow

Discovery Sixth

In the handicap division, Alfred G. Vanderbilt's Discovery, generally rated the best at one better than even, won the Saranac Handicap at Saratoga. Hal Price Headley's Apogee was the leading money winner of the fillies in each race, $98,000.

Scarry Defends Eleanor

Pittsburgh, July 28 (AP)—Jack Scarry the coach who developed winsome Lenore Knight Wingard into America's No. 1 freestyle swimmer, declared today he thought the Olympic committee's dismissal of Eleanor Holm Jarrett for drinking was "grossly unfair."

The mentor, whose Homestead Library Club relay team held the national title in 1932 3-4-5 said:

"From what I know of Mrs. Jarrett's case, I'd say she had three strikes on her before she got on the boat. Every man on that committee knew her habits. She could have been controlled if there had been a sincere desire to do so.

Silly

"And why all those warnings? The committee has the power of suspension. But no; it preferred to wait until the boat landed, then spring the ousting surprise on her.

"It's the silliest thing I've heard in years."

Scarry said he thought the girls on the Olympic team needed "relaxation" aboard ship to take their minds off the races, and that if there had been a swimmer on the committee he would have understood the situation. He added:

"Training aboard ship necessarily had to be confined mainly to harness work. What did it matter if they didn't keep the strictest training rules. Two or three days of stiff training would have snapped them back into shape."

And don't think Scarry is one of those easy-going fellows. Lenore, his star pupil, got married a year ago and decided to let her husband, a physical instructor, be her coach, too

It wasn't long before she began to lose speed. In a Chicago meet last winter she didn't win a race she begged leave from her husband in Cincinnati and hurried back to her old director to prepare for the Olympic trials, saying:

"My husband's no good as a trainer for me. He isn't strict enough."

Here's a look at some of written instructions from Scarry with her to Berlin.

FOUR NATIONS SEEK SPORTS

By WILLIAM SHIRER
Universal Service Correspondent

Berlin, July 28—Four countries, Finland, Italy, Great Britain and Japan, were preparing to bid for the 1940 Olympic games tonight with Japan the overwhelming favorite of the 45 nations of the international Olympic committee who will decide the matter in a special meeting Wednesday.

Only the opposition of the representatives of the smaller European nations who fear their teams cannot afford the long jaunt to Tokyo cast a cloud over Japan's aspirations to be Olympic host for the first time.

Of this opposition, it was indicated would be easily overcome

The smaller European states were inclined to back Finland as the site of the next games. Helsingfors, the Finnish capital reported tonight, has already built itself an "Olympic" stadium and has the necessary guarantees to Count Latour, president of the International committee

Finns Sporty

The Finns, as a sporting people seemed willing, however to let the 1940 games go to Tokyo if they could get a gentlemen's agreement from the international committee assuring them the games for 1944

Some surprises was caused by London's bid for the next games The international committee has been presented with a formal invitation from Sir Percy Vincent, lord mayor of London, given on his behalf by Lord Burghley, president of the British Olympic committee

The British invitation appeared to ruffle the feelings of the Japanese officials who said they were "certainly surprised at a bid from this quarter

The lord mayor of London points out in his invitation that it was Great Britain which came to the rescue of the Olympics in 1908 when Rome, which was to have the games, backed out. They were held that year in London

The British Olympic committee backed up the lord mayor's offer with a guaranty of 100,000 pounds for the games. The British representatives said that if the games were awarded to London they would be held in the Wembley Stadium, which seats 100,000

An Olympic village, necessary feature of the Olympic games since Los Angles set it up there in 1932, as well as a swimming stadium, would be built at Wembley, it was said.

Italy Out

Italy's bid for the games was not taken very seriously here. It was made, it was understood, as a gesture.

Members of the international Olympic committee were wondering tonight how a certain Olympic tradition would be maintained if Japan were awarded the 1940 games

Jack Medica, Tank Star, Out With Cold

Berlin, July 28 (INS)—Illness struck another blow at American Olympic preparations today when Jack Medica, ace swimmer, failed to report for practice because of a cold

Medica, it was learned, has not worked for at least two days because of his ailment.

The men's relay team has not yet been selected, with six competitors fighting avidly for the four available places.

Gene Venzke, track star, who weighed in at 153 pounds, said today he considered himself at the top shape of his career after a morning workout in the rain. Jesse Owens loosened up briefly and then laid off until this afternoon when he will swing through a 3-round trial.

Ralph Metcalfe worked both morning and afternoon, although the bumpy track continued a handicap. Fred Pollard worked with the hurdlers, all of whom were confined to the flat by poor condition of the track. Pollard, Italy's Olympic champion, looked good in a mile workout.

The field squad was struck a hard blow when Dimitri Zaitz of Boston College injured his foot practicing the shotput, eliminating him as a possible winner. The injury will prevent further practice between now and the games.

Shawnee, Pa., July 28—Virginia Bascom of Worcester, Mass. led the qualifying field in the Shawnee women's golf tournament with a 78, six strokes over men's par for the difficult course.

'Gansett Double On 1st Two Races

Pawtucket, R. I., July 28—There is no stopping Walter E. O'Hara, Narragansett's managing director when it comes to new innovations in racing.

It was O'Hara that introduced the daily double feature to New England and it is the same gentleman who will introduce the daily double on the first and second races at Narragansett's Summer Meeting which is listed to get underway August 15

The double, hitherto operated on the first and third races, will be changed to the first and second. O'Hara made the change in response to many suggestions received from double fans, who apparently desire quick action

The daily double is operated on the first and second races it can be handled much more easily by the mutuels department.

Braddock Bout Pleases Teuton

Berlin, July 27 (US)—Max Schmeling, Germany's "Black Uhlan," conqueror of Joe Louis, was delighted to hear today that terms had been reached to enable him to fight James J. Braddock for the heavyweight title in September. Schmeling said:

"I'll be in New York around August 10. The arrangements are perfectly okay with me. I'm interested only in getting the title back."

COLLYER'S SPORT OF KINGS COMMENT

By BERT E. COLLYER
(Copyright, 1936, by Co ers a News ce, ce)

Down at Empire City the getaway day offering, to say the least, "is nothing to write home about," in fact a very ordinary lot of mavericks is slated to bear colors.

However, LORD TOURNAMENT, even if he has the proverbial ton of coal on his back, seems easily the best bet of the day. Rain or shine, he'll be on the "head end." Of course, mud moves him up—three or more points. CAPUCHE, which has been a "cooler" these several starts should outlast SUN TEATIME and PRETTY BUSY

In the day's opener, STAR PUPIL seems a very ordinary lot and should graduate. No. 1 don't believe the weight will stop him. FOREWARNED was touted as the "hottest thing of the meeting" for the second and in which Jersey also reports commissioners for RONSOIR. LITTLE LIE is strictly a muder.

At Arlington

PHAROSAY, "the crazy horse" —yours, I say, "like a fox"—is tumbled in with a lot of beetles in the fifth at Arlington; incidentally, the manner in which the "price hounds" took the over night "line," it wouldn't surprise me in the least to see "PHAR" tip for his field. Yeah, real smart people.

BILL DONOGHUE, which was recently shipped here, is dropped into a keen spot, and if the ring indicates sharp "action," I suggest you climb aboard the Cash wagon. Pretty fair sort of a hide, and the stable a heap right better than even hands. Oh, Yes, HASTY WIRE, from the Calumet stable and raised a top notcher, is given the call over UNEASY, which "Big Jim" has on feathered edge—for the Whitneys. In that order I fancy them.

MALONE Sets Pace for VETS

New York, July 28 (AP)—After all is said and done, it seems a good time was had by all on that Olympic trip.

Friends say Harry Stuhldreher is just the lad to make the Wisconsin coaching job one of the best in the country.

Pete Norton, Tampa sports ed, and Joe McCarthy were the only ones to give him a tumble in the spring . . . As far back as April 2, Pete predicted they would win the rag . . . Looks as if he may have a chuckle or so coming.

Leon Ketchel, Polish heavyweight, is so tall he steps over the ropes when entering the ring instead of climbing through

While listing the year's prize baseball comebacks, don't overlook the corker Pat Malone is turning in for the Yankees

Jon Henry Lewis is just about to supplant Tony Canzoneri as the busiest ring champion.

Busy Boxer

The negro light-heavy king has fought 25 times in the last 13 months and aims to the post again Thursday night . . . It will be just too bad for Texas Tech if war breaks out . . . Thirty-nine football players are in the National Guard . . . Make my uniform blue with the Tech colors, red, white and blue

Shots in the dark: Bill McGinty, pro at the Homestead Club, Spring Lake, N. J., made a bet he could shoot the first nine holes of the course in the dark in, not more than 45 strokes . . . Bill teed off at 8:30 p. m. with a flashlight furnishing the only illumination

Well, the best he could do for Bill was 31 . . . Par for the first nine is 37 . . . But Bill had to call off his stunt because the torch bearers (who previously had visited the 19th hole), called it a day and went home after the sixth

If Bill could play like that in the sunlight, he could sign his own ticket at any club in the country.

Cheering news: Ray Daughters, Washington A. C. swimming coach, says Uncle Sam's Olympic swimmers have a decided edge on the Japanese and that the American girls are on a par with their rivals from the Netherlands . . .

Boxing Due for Revival

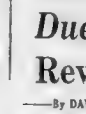
By DAVE EGAN

There are articles creeping into the public prints these days concerning the art of box-fighting, and it may be that the sport will be dusted off and revived before many weeks.

Squire J. Sharkey is working every day at the gymnasium, as he fixes to fight Maxie Joe Louis;



Dave Egan

Hyer Max Schmeling and Jimmy Braddock have signed to fight for the title; and your turbulent old friend, Top Sergeant Edward Aloysius Bartholomew Mack has applied for a license for the Arizona A. A.

Mr. Eddie Mack is one of the most colorful characters this good earth has ever known and, in his day, he was reckoned one of the greats among the fight promoters

He made several fortunes in the boxing business, and lost them all trying to figure the horses. One Summer at Braves Field, he ran 36 fights on 16 consecutive Monday nights, and made for himself $103,000 in 16 weeks, which gives you a vague idea of the manner in which he amassed wealth.

Uses Schaaf

In those days, Jim Maloney was his ace, but he also used the late Ernie Schaaf and others. Now there are few young New England fighters of talent, and it will be part of Mr. Mack's duty to develop them

Al McCoy looks like the outstanding ring attraction in New England at the moment, with the exception of Jack Sharkey. He is a rugged young French-Canadian with a terrific sock in both hands, and it is possible that, some day, he will become the heavyweight champion of the world.

McCoy has done his fighting recently in Canada, where he has a tremendous gate attraction, but you may rest assured that Top Sergeant Mack will dig up opponents for him, and that said opponents will not be top-ovest.

It is high time that boxing enjoyed a revival here, and I can think of nobody better qualified to lead it

The leading fight promoters in New England, right or left years back, were Mack, Will-yum Ames, and Sam Price. Ames is now publicity director of Narragansett, Mr. Price conducts rassles at the Arena each and every Wednesday night.

Mack, though, has been itching to foment fights for several months now. He had planned a White Hope camp at Rockingham Park, just as soon as Joe Louis belted out Schmeling and Braddock, but the plans went "gang aglee" when Schmeling hauled off and made something resembling an order of ham hash out of Louis

Very Private

Undoubtedly Top Sergeant Mack will have a suite of offices, including a very private office where he can talk confidentially to the fight managers

And, if he has not changed, he will say: "Don't go, fellers. I gotta talk to this guy privately. It won't take a minute."

Thereupon he will retreat to his private office, carefully closing the door behind him, and soon you will hear his enraged bellows with great distinctness, as he talks privately in his private office

"That bum of yours," you will hear him saying, "couldn't fight his way into a jail. I'll give ya 17½ per cent for him, and not a quarter more. I can lick the tramp myself, and you want 20 per cent."

And a few minutes later, he'll walk out and say:

"Fellers, I just signed a helluva match."

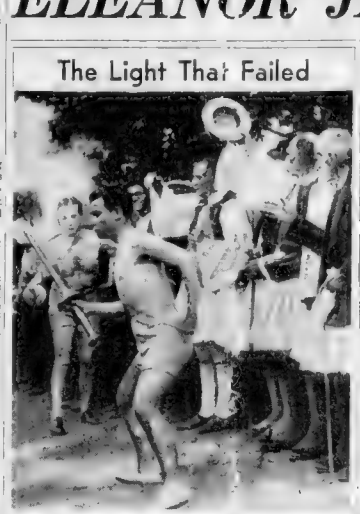
As if you didn't know.

Amateur Race at Revere Thursday

President Howard C. Davis of the Old Harbor Kennel Club, on Thursday afternoon will stage another amateur performance at Wonderland for racing dogs. "Swiftly" will go into action promptly at four o'clock and all persons with racing dogs are invited to send their pets after the elusive mechanical rabbit.

Mr. Davis inaugurated this innovation on a greyhound race track last year and the idea met with tremendous success. Scores of persons who believed their dogs were good runners brought them to Revere and in many cases the dogs put on an exciting performance. The most humorous of the events last summer involved a huge bulldog who chased "Swiftly" with the enthusiasm of a thoroughbred racing greyhound

Several kennels of highly valuable afghans and salukis will be entered on the amateur card Thursday. These breeds are well known to exhibitors in the big dog shows and, as a rare species in this country. The greyhound is a descendant of the saluki, the oldest breed of dogs known to history



The Light That Failed

IN A SETTING of Hellenic pageantry the Olympic flame, solemnly kindled atop Mount Olympus by the sun's rays, is being started on its way to the scene of the Olympic games in Germany. Hundreds of runners in relays are carrying the torch over hill and vale from one country to another. On August 1st it is scheduled to arrive in Berlin to signal the start of the games. This shows the start of the flame from the scene of the first Olympiad. Notice the men in the giant costume in the background. The flame, incidentally, went out near Belgrade, Yugoslavia, until a man with an ordinary match came to the rescue.

Beda Best Wager At Wonderland

FRANK LONERGAN IN NO. 1 BOX

By SAM COHEN
BEST BET—BEDA
Seventh Race

Back in top form, despite a poor showing last trip due to adverse breaks, H. E. Alderson's Beda figures to grace the winner's circle in the seventh at Wonderland Park tonight, and also must be considered as the best bet on the card.

Frank Lonergan, breaking out of the No. 1 slot, should hold off Nebraska Cash and Chief's Darling to take the eighth-race feature.

FIRST RACE—FUTURITY

STORM CLOUD, MELODRAMA, JOHN J
1 Storm Cloud 86 Sid Napier 4-1
2 Melodrama 86 Freda Koonts 8-1
3 Jocko 86 Arch De Giser 8-1
4 Mighty Monarch 86 William Jenzen 6-1
5 Helen 83 Billy Allen 8-1
6 Judy's Jay 83 John Allen 8-1
7 Glenmire 87 B Callaghan 10-1
8 Creek Rock 83 William Baker 10-1

STORM CLOUD always in the money against competition of this sort. Beda has chances greatly improved by drawing the one hole. Fast-breaking Manor pup may never be headed from the position. MELODRAMA is class of the race, although his recent ones have not been good enough to entitle her to better than a second choice here. JOHN J, speedy veteran, drops down the class ladder. GLENMIRE has been training through from Maine and is bred and merits a long-shot chance

SECOND RACE—FUTURITY
SOUTHERN FRIEND, JUST RESULTS, LYON ROCK
1 Sundown Friend 76 F. W. Jones 5-1
2 Just Results 85 J. D. Hall 5-1
3 Lyon Rock 85 Jean Dunham 5-1
4 Final Jack 85 Sid Napier 6-1
5 Spokesman 85 R. C. Snell 8-1
6 Whooper's And 85 R. Sundgren 5-1
7 Corn Tassel 85 Mrs. H. Chase 10-1
8 Miller Creek 85 Mrs. Richbower 6-1

SOUTHERN FRIEND, 78 pounds, top weight, is the top-notch hound in the field on Thursday evening. Dog showed improvement in last effort, but is not the Wonderland Park JUST RESULTS second four races ago. Many against better company, looks second best. LYON ROCK is on the improve and is a serious factor throughout. FINAL JACK has not done much lately but looks best of others. SPOKESMAN and WHOOPER'S AND DREW both green, but have shown good promise in trials

THIRD RACE—6-16 MILE
MY BETTY, ROVING GYPSY, SILVER RIVER

1	My Betty	82	E. McGinnis 5-1
2	Roving Gypsy	86	Arch De Giser 5-1
3	Silver River	86	Freda Koonts 6-1
4	Grace Ann	87	Wm. Baker 8-1
5	Bingo	68	Glenwood Ken. 8-1
6	Beda's Best	83	R. E. Snell 10-1
7	Rawdon's Traf.	66	W. Worth Ion 10-1
8	Ben Bolt	88	Clarence Ken. 10-1

MY BETTY, breaking from the end box, has a slight edge over ROVING GYPSY, any one of whom could take it all with a moderate performance. Drop in the claiming group. All have had chances against good company. ROVING GYPSY is bred to stay and should go the eight mile. SILVER RIVER has been in top with Jenzen on mount but always disappointed

FOURTH RACE—FUTURITY
OAKLAND HARBOR, BRAVE SHOW

7	Oakland Harbor	90	John Allen 6-1
2	Brave Show	87	Sid Napier 6-1
3	Just Classic	87	J. D. Hall 5-1
4	Lucky Ramona	87	E. McGinnis 8-1
5	Sharp Donald	84	W. McDonough 7-1
6	Alva B.	90	Arch De Giser 8-1
8	War Blows	88	Mrs. Failing 10-1
1	Lucky Lish	87	Glenwood Ken 10-1

OAKLAND HARBOR in money each of three times out competing against this previous starts, may be the right one. Little chance the race but some of the pups have shown speed on occasions. BRAVE SHOW and JUST CLASSIC are this type, should be the main contention. LUCKY RAMONA won the last and will be dangerous

FIFTH RACE—6-16 MILE
ENCHANTED WELL, BARRY, TRAFFIC TRAVELER

1	Enchanted Well	85	H. Irwin 5-1
2	Barry	85	R. Allerson 5-1
3	Traffic Traveler	81	Wm. Baker 6-1
4	Silver's Star	84	Allen 8-1
5	Dark Lad	84	Chas. Meiners 8-1
6	Salty Sea	84	J. J. Keenan 10-1
7	Golden Vixen	84	J. A. Austin 10-1
8	Chief Matchpa	85	F. Davis 10-1

ENCHANTED WELL, winner in three of 15 starts against fairly rare competition on about dut for one of his winning efforts.

Pup has dropped down from the [illegible] race and by respective against better [illegible] BARR, winner in a cheap race Saturday, is in line to bear for the money. The 5-16 mile race TRAFFIC TRAVELER for the [illegible]

SIXTH RACE—FUTURITY
JUST MAX, DWINDLE LADDIE, LAS

8	Just Max	87	Clement Ken 8-1
1	Twinkle's Lad	87	W. Wilmington 3-1
2	Lassie Girl	83	S. B. Fox 5-1
3	Connie Mack	85	L. Thompson 8-1
4	Dwindle Laddie	87	C. Callaghan 5-1
5	Class Lad	70	F. Lawson 10-1

Accidental Hanging!

Mother Nature Sets Diabolical Trap to Catch Little Boy

By FLOYD GIBBONS

FLOYD GIBBONS

HELLO EVERYBODY:

Well, sir, here's an adventure story that was written in self defense. Margaret Phelan of Bayside, N. Y., wrote it, and it's the story of something that happened to her 11-year-old son Johnny. Margaret says Johnny teased her to write that yarn until he almost had her crazy. It was a case of losing her mind or earning ten bucks, and Margaret needs all the mind she's got to keep Johnny out of mischief. So how'll you take the ten, Margaret? Singles, or all in one bill?

Johnny thinks he had one of the narrowest escapes any boy EVER had. Well, so do I. He also had one of the strangest and most terrible experiences I ever heard of. It was in April, 1933. Johnny was staying home from school that day, getting over a sore throat. The sun was out, and Margaret suggested that he go outdoors for a while and enjoy it.

Johnny went out and got the axe from the woodshed. There was some wooded ground a few blocks away from his home, and he set out in that direction. He walked into the woods a little ways and started to climb a tree.

Well sir, it's tough work trying to climb a tree with an axe in your hand. Johnny found that out before he got to the first limb.

To get rid of that axe, he stuck it in the tree as high up above him as he could reach. Then, using both hands, he shinnied up the rest of the distance.

When he got to the first branches he turned to get the axe again. But as he swung around, holding on with one hand, he jammed his head into the fork of another branch.

The [illegible] caught him behind the ears and a sudden stab of pain went through his cranium. He let go his hold on the limb above him, and the next thing he knew he was dangling by the head from where the fork of the branch [illegible] the ground.

Ever hanging by your neck? I'll bet not many of you have. Most people don't get strung up that way, do they? Yes sir, Johnny was in a fix.

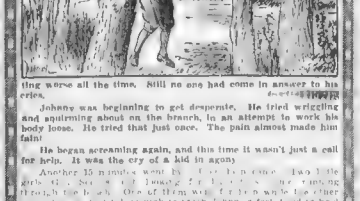
Johnny let out a scream as the forked branch gripped him at the base of his skull. For a second or two he thought he'd faint from pain and fright. Then he began yelling at the top of his voice.

Nobody answered. It was a deserted part of the town he was in. The streets thereabouts were little more than roads running through the woods.

The nearest house was—well—a lot farther away than a half-choked little boy's voice would carry.

He kept on yelling and screaming, though, because he couldn't think of anything else to do.

Fifteen minutes went by. The pain back of his ears was getting worse all the time. Still no one had come in answer to his cries.



Johnny was beginning to get desperate. He tried wriggling and squirming about on the branch, in an attempt to work his body loose. He tried that just once. The pain almost made him faint.

He began screaming again, and this time it wasn't just a call for help. It was the cry of a kid in agony.

Another 15 minutes went by. [illegible] Two little girls [illegible] through the woods [illegible] through the branch. One of them was [illegible] the other one, who was just old enough to [illegible] to hold him up and [illegible] one of his arms off [illegible].

It must have been 20 minutes later when the [illegible] girl returned. With her came a man she'd found [illegible] down the street. He tried to get Johnny out of that forked branch, but he was afraid he couldn't do anything without hurting the poor kid. He sent one of the girls [illegible] police.

By that time Johnny was so weak he could only talk in a whisper. Altogether it was close to two hours that he dangled up there by his neck, getting nearer and nearer to the end of his endurance.

But he had to suffer another interminable wait until, at last, two policemen arrived on the scene.

It was a poser for the cops, too. They didn't see how he could get Johnny's head out from the fork of that branch without hurting him. But they also realized there was no time to lose, not even time to [illegible] the ambulance [illegible].

They put a ladder and one of them climbed up to push his head out of the fork while the other stood by to catch him when he fell.

It hurt Johnny, of course, but he wasn't conscious enough to feel it.

"I'll never forget," says Margaret, "the way he looked when they brought him home. His mouth was all twisted, and behind both ears he had dents you could put your finger in. His eyes were sunken, and he couldn't talk. The doctor stuck pins in his arm, but he couldn't even feel them. His whole right side was paralyzed."

Johnny went to the hospital and stayed there for six weeks. He was [illegible] and when [illegible] was [illegible] almost a year before he could go out and play with the other kids again.

Today [illegible] is a husky lad who looks as if the experience of that terrible day [illegible] him. As I said before, he pasted her into writing this story.

Yes, and the rest of you boys and girls need somebody to pester you, too. Hurry up and get those true adventure yarns in here. We'll be hearing another amazing story tomorrow. Until then—Change Cars!

Goldwyn Seeks 'Idiot's Delight' Rights

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Motion Picture Editor Universal Service

Los Angeles, July 28—If the modest little asking price of $200,000 is brought down to reason, there is a very strong chance that Samuel Goldwyn will buy "Idiot's Delight," the Lynn Fontanne-Alfred Lunt-Theater Guild hit.

Louella O. Parsons

Snapshots of Hollywood:

FRANK MORGAN, one of Hollywood's most popular comedians, is most unhappy because JEAN HARLOW, with whom he MAY BE teamed in HOUSE OF DANGER, refuses to work with him. Seems Jean and Frank had a few words after the latter had been cast in "Reunion in Vienna" with JOHN BARRYMORE. Frank is reported to have said that Jean was "temperamental" and "difficult to work with." Jean, on the other hand, is said to have declared that Frank was "old-fashioned" and "behind the times." Both are fine actors and I hope they can patch up their differences.

Merritt Hulburd, who is directing the Lux Radio Theater broadcasts, has been signed by Paramount to direct CHARLES BOYER in "Break of Hearts," which Katharine Hepburn will do on the air with Boyer. Hulburd is the husband of Margaret Sullavan, who is under contract to Universal. Peggy Wood is another actress who is being sought by Paramount for the Boyer broadcast. Miss Wood is now in Hollywood playing a role in "Craig's Wife" for Columbia. Hulburd has been trying to get other members of his family and even Margaret herself to appear on the air with him, but Universal refuses to release her.

Mark Twain's story "The Million Pound Bank Note" is being prepared by Paramount as a starring vehicle for GEORGE BURNS. Burns is teamed with Gracie Allen on the radio and in pictures. Gracie will not be in the picture, however. Burns will be supported by Joe Morrison, Dixie Dunbar and Ben Bernie. Burns will play the role of a poor man who is given a million pounds by a rich uncle. He is told that he must spend the money in thirty days and that he must not tell anyone what he is doing. Burns will be seen in a number of situations that are sure to be funny. Mitchell Leisen will direct.

Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., are going to Europe on the Normandie. Mary is going to see her mother, who is ill in London, and Doug is going to see Mary. Walter Wanger is going to Europe to find other members of his family and even Sylvia Sidney is going to Europe to find other members of her family and even anything.

Bernhardt is to repeat her role of Camille in the Paramount picture with GARBO. Bernhardt is trying to find other members of her family and even anything.

Glimpsing the svelte and lithian Josephine Hutchinson at a cafe, she of the cook-a-night-out, reminds me that Producer Hal Wallis is planning a film of parts for the Warner lot. Among those in the cast are Pat O'Brien, Dave Niven and Bette Davis. The part is the wife of Dave's role of Bette Davis. The part is the wife of Dave's role of Bette Davis. INDUSTRIES' SALES

Gather Momentum

By LEWIS HANEY

(Professor of Economics, New York University)

New York, July 28—Industrial activity continued moderately reactionary last week . . . This was to be expected on account of drouth conditions in some sections and the gradual waning of the current automobile season.

But the general picture is merely one of mixed conditions, and sentiment is, on the whole, distinctly optimistic. Thus, while hot, dry weather hurt retail trade in some areas and slowed up industrial production in some steel and automobile plants, it stimulated the demand for electrical power, the sale of grain at high prices, and probably the tourist trade. Certainly it has increased "relief" expenditures.

In considering the various statistical "indexes" which aim to be scientific and make "adjustments" for seasonal variations, the reader should note that seasonal conditions are now badly out of kilter. It is difficult enough to figure seasonal changes by the week; but, what with the abnormal weather, the changed automobile season and government interference, the adjustments are now apt to be positively misleading. So I do not feel at all sure that the "declines" shown by various "seasonally adjusted" indexes during the past two weeks are real.

Anyhow, all reports agree that activity is usually well sustained at a high level which approaches the old "normal." For example, the Federal Reserve Board's index of industrial production for last month is 103 per cent of the average of 1923 to 1925.

* * *

It continues to be especially notable that demand from building operations and railways, and improved prospects for utility and oil company buying, are boosting the machine tool and electrical equipment industries. In short, the long-awaited expansion in capital goods industries is gathering momentum.

This offers more promise of reducing unemployment than all the alphabetical organizations of the New Deal and all the billions of government spending put together.

It is this expansion which is bringing in orders for steel and sustaining that industry at levels above 70 per cent of theoretical capacity, despite summer heat and vacation periods.

While something of the usual seasonal let-down is belatedly showing in the automobile industry, most indications point to a continued good demand for the current models, and a quick shift to the new ones, with unusually little lost motion between seasons.

Cotton mills have accumulated a good value of unfilled orders, and some are now making money for the first time in years.

With the building industry forging ahead, the recent reaction in lumber production is probably to be considered as a mere temporary readjustment. (Incidentally, I note reports that real estate transfers are growing, and that banks are finally getting out from under their holdings of such property taken over to protect themselves after the big slump.)

* * *

One has to note that car loadings did fall off last week, and that the decline appears to be contra-seasonal. Abnormal weather conditions, however, make it difficult to interpret this dip.

And speaking of the weather, as I can make out, there has been enough rain of late to improve considerably the prospects for the corn crop. Unquestionably the nation has suffered a disaster and faces increased living costs as a result. The first half of August will be critical for corn. But I think that the Washington authorities are overplaying the "disaster," partly as an alibi for their own mistakes and partly to sell the country their schemes for government interference and spending.

* * *

Retail trade, though hit by drouth in the Middle West and Northwest sections, is on the whole very good, and running around 12 per cent above a year ago. (The tourist and summer resort business is fairly booming.) And, as sometimes happens, the rural mail order business seems to show no drouth effects at all.

Best of all are the heavy arrivals of buyers in wholesale centers and their great optimism concerning fall trade.

ASSAILS Hearing on TRUSTS

GROVES CALLED TO TESTIFY

Washington, July 28 (AP)—A witness at the securities commission's investigation of investment trusts and companies told the commission today it was "violating the Constitution of the United States in proceeding with this hearing."

The witness—Wallace Groves, New York and Baltimore financier—was called to elaborate upon testimoony yesterday regarding a series of million-dollar deals in the stocks of two investment companies of which he was a director.

David Schenker, commission counsel, contended Groves marked up a $400,000 profit through the transactions but the witness contended his profit was not that large.

* * *

As he took the stand today, Groves filed a prepared statement saying he had consulted with counsel regarding a suit brought in Federal District Court here yesterday seeking to prevent the commission from compelling attendance of certain witnesses or obtaining certain records.

"I am advised by such counsel," Groves said, "that in their opinion the Securities and Exchange Commission is without power or authority . . . to hold this public hearing in relation to investment companies or investment trusts.

Groves added, however, that "irrespective of my legal rights, guaranteed to me by the Constitution," he was desirous of being "constructive and helpful" and therefore would proceed with his testimony.

* * *

An unsuccessful effort to halt the commission's inquiry at its outset was made in the federal district court here yesterday by F. T. Fisher of New York, a stockholder in Equity Corporation of New York. Judge Oscar Luhring refused to issue a temporary restraining order which he requested but ordered the commission to show cause at a hearing August 5 why an injunction against the hearing should not be issued.

GROSS Of New Haven GAINS

FOR FIRST SIX MONTHS

New Haven, Conn., July 28 (AP)—Gross revenues of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company for the first six months of 1936 disclosed an increase of $2,676,504 it was announced today.

An increase in operating expenses, however, caused the deficit for a similar period last year.

Operating expenses during this period increased $3,728,544. The deficit for the period is $4,286,497 and compares with a deficit of $1,613,930 for the first six months in 1935.

* * *

The road reported adeficit after charges for June of $472,581 compared with a deficit of $35,052 in June, 1935. Operating revenues for last month increased $286,605 over the previous year, freight revenue increasing $187,543 while passenger revenue increased $28,412.

Operating expenses last month increased $344,386 over a year ago and maintenance expenses increased $287,584 due to a continuation of the program covering rail and the installations and the application of cast steel side frames and repairs to freight cars.

The month of June also includes tax accruals on account of the railroad retirement and socias security legislation.

Boston & Maine Reports Deficit

The Boston & Maine Railroad reports for June a deficit after charges of $58,637. This compares with surplus after charges of $50,-263 in June, 1935.

An increase in revenues of $168,-581 in comparison with June, 1935, was offset in part by an increase of $261,381 in operating expenses, of which $159,929 was an abnormal charge due to snow.

While the road reported a large increase in number of passengers carried during the month, passenger receipts showed a loss of $16,-306 in the first month of the new rates as compared with June last year.

Freight revenues in June this year were $.70 per cent better than last June and express revenues increased 22.18 per cent.

MILLS GAIN By Machinery Tax

Leading Massachusetts industries are feeling the benefit of the law passed by the last session of the legislature exempting manufacturing machinery from local taxation, and providing instead a tax of $2 per $1000.

State tax officials estimate change in the law will lift a burden of approximately $5,500,000 from industries.

New York, July 28 (INS)—N. Y. Central planned merger to bring all properties under ownership of parent company, it was learned in excess of half-billion expected.

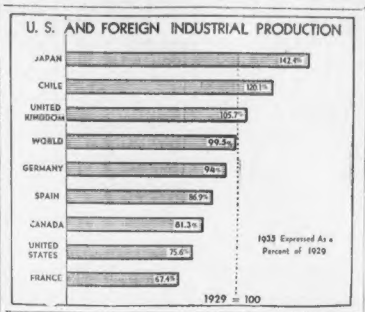
Cotton dropped 24 new lows with loss of $14 a bale in month.

U. S. INDUSTRY



Wall Street Sidelights

New York, July 28—Banks have gone a bit further recently than they normally do during the summer in reducing operating expenses through retrenchment steps.

The drive toward greater economies because of lean earnings now in progress is held up by executives of certain institutions as a factor in the late improved public sentiment toward their stocks. It was disclosed in Washington dispatches yesterday that the Federal Reserve Board is conducting a survey for the purpose of effecting economies within the system. Thus far the board's activities have been confined to a reduction of salaries in the higher brackets, but it is now endeavoring to extend this economies in the organization and operating divisions. Early this year the office of chairman in the 12 regional banks was placed on an honorary basis, cutting the system payroll about $240,000 a year.

Rate Fights Hit; Canada Utility

Utility rate litigation in the Province of Ontario has completely cut off the income of the Ottawa Valley Power Company, which up to several months ago was earning charges on its 5½ per cent bonds of 1970 by a substantial margin. The situation which confronts creditors of the company is rather unusual, according to the Lambborn, Hutchings & Co. investment review, because "it puts them in the uncomfortable position of being threatened with a default while still owning instruments of credit representing values with relatively attractive earning power. The firm adds that "meanwhile, Gatineau Power 5 per cent debentures, which at one time sold well under Ottawa Valley Power 5½s, are now selling at substantial premiums over the subject issue. The political factions in the Province of Ontario in permitting this situation to develop into its present form have helped, if only temporarily, to reduce noticeably the investment confidence which investors in this country have had in the past for business enterprises emanating within the Dominion."

K. C. Southern Income From Oil

Kansas City Southern Railway's income shortly should be boosted by around $8600 monthly by reason of its bringing in two oil wells on its property, it was indicated. While the two wells are said to have potential capacities of 30,000 barrels daily each, proration rules will hold output of each down to 300 barrels daily. It is indicated that initial income from the wells for about five and one-half months is needed to defray drilling costs, which run around 20,000 per well, but after this charge has been taken care of, royalty income of the road, on the basis of $1 oil, would be around $4300 monthly per well, or $8600 altogether. Presence of oil on the road's property should tend to bolster the carrier's asset position, says one observer.

Rails Would Like To Be Forgotten

Railroad executives here had no public comment to offer regarding the nomination acceptance address of Republican Presidential Candidate Landon. One rail man said: "I noticed that Governor Landon's address in no place referred to the railroads. This is, therefore, no time for a railroad man to comment. I might state, however, that the railroads generally will be pleased that Landon omitted reference to them in his remarks. It is the hope of the rails, whose business has been improving, that they will be forgotten as a political subject for a few years. The railroads will come along alright, if they are just let alone for a while."

WESTCHESTER Extension Granted

New Haven, Ct., July 28 (AP)—The officials of the New York, Westchester & Boston Railway Company had an additional month today to file a proposed plan of reorganization with the United States district court.

Originally scheduled to be filed by August 5, Judge Carroll C. Hincks moved the date to September 3 after hearing a plea by the bondholders' committee for more time.

The federal judge also signed three orders permitting Clinton L. Bardo, the road's trustee, to dispose of real property.

LEAD STOCKS Up in Month

Stocks of lead in the United States on July 1 amounted to 315,-350 tons, against 314,508 on June 1 and 319,297 on July 1, 1935, according to American Bureau of Metals Statistics.

World refined lead production in June totaled 135,287 tons, against 144,725 in May and 120,500 in June last year. United States lead production during June came to 36,-756 tons, against 39,258 in May.

PRODUCTION Lagging Behind Foreign

According to this chart, industrial production in the United States is lagging behind the majority of foreign countries.

Consideration must be given to the fact that in certain foreign countries the increase in industrial production was not only due to the rise in the normal forces of recovery but also to the stimulus given production by the increased demands for war materials.

Industrial production in the United States in 1935 was only 75.6 per cent of its 1929 level, whereas in Japan, Chile and the United Kingdom it was above the 1929 level.

Auto Change-Over To Cut Output

Automobile production may be expected to taper off rather sharply the next few weeks as plants shut down for taking of inventory and preparation for introduction of new models in late September and early October.

Dealers' stocks of passenger cars have been dropping steadily the past five months and are estimated at about 370,000 cars at present, or close to five weeks' supply at current rate of sales.

Studebaker and Packard have both stepped production on the 1936 lines. It is expected that at least one other maker, whose volume is relatively small, will shut down within a week. Volume producers are expected to follow in ensuing weeks.

Present indications are the production drop will result from abrupt shutdowns rather than a long drawn out decline. Manufacturers are anxious to keep changeover periods as short as possible because of strong retail demand and need for building up dealers' stocks again in anticipation of the New York show opening November 11. Average shutdown of six weeks or less seems likely.

Increase Predicted

A prominent Maine newsprint manufacturer was quoted as predicting an increase of $2.50 a ton in newsprint Jan. 1, 1937. A majority of the large producers have tentatively agreed upon that adjustment, he indicated.

Wall Street Hears

New York, July 28 (INS)—That second quarter results of W. T. Grigley, Jr., Co. (WWY) are estimated at 90 cents a share.

That action may be taken soon on the $10.50 a share accumulations on Goodyear (GOR) preferred stock.

That National Acme (NCM) net in the June quarter was close to 32 cents a share.

CHAIN Stores Major MISTAKE

FOUND VULNERABLE

By MERRYLE STANLEY RUKEYSER

The major blunder of the chain store.. is that they were so preoccupied selling coffee and eggs that they neglected to sell themselves.

With a strange astigmatism, the chains stupidly neglected institutional promotion.

They thought it unnecessary to make the public aware of the nature of the service rendered. Accordingly, when hostile competitors handed together against them, they were found vulnerable.

Apparently the epidemic of statewide anti-chain store tax legislation and the Federal Robinson-Patman Act have awakened chain store executives to the need of demonstrating that they are socially useful.

Nowadays a popular theme is to help the farmers. The chains have belatedly gotten in line.

Incidentally, for generations, the agrarian has complained of the high cost of distribution, charging "gouging" by the middleman.

While helping themselves, the chains are now seeking to serve the farmer as well as the consumer.

As a result of experience in California in marketing excess crops, a nationwide program of cooperation between the chain and farm groups has been adopted. The California test was made in connection with a surplus of peaches.

In tying up the chains as a more direct outlet for farm products, the chains agreed to the unfeasibility of brokerage payments to merchandising buyers, unearned advertising allowances, unreasonable quantity discounts and to using agricultural commodities as "loss leaders."

This ideal gives a tip to business executives generally.

Instead of standing by and debating with their critics as to whether or not they are menaces, they should concentrate on initiating policies of unquestioned public usefulness.

Business, as distinguished from racketeering, is socially useful, and the job of management is perpetually to invent ways and means of widening the sphere of public service.

The public will gradually pay a profit to those who find a way to make better products for less money, or to distribute them in better form at a lesser mark-up.

Business executives should avoid the political technique of pulling rabbits out of the hat.

Policies should not be inaugurated merely as talking points.

It is a mistake to think that advertising or publicity can be helped by merely calling attention to meritorious products and services.

If advertising is to be successful, the company must have products and services which are worth focussing a searchlight on.

Incidentally, one of the by-products of the present inquiry is that it sets standards for a company, with which its personnel seeks to comply.

* * *

Dissenting from the views of economic planners, Dr. Benjamin M. Anderson, economist of the Chase National Bank, in the National Business Business, concludes: "Prices themselves, wiser than any man who helps to make them, guide and control the economic activities of men."

Prices, if free, are an intelligence system, reporting all the factors involved in a business situation.

They are useful as a source of information.

Yet they may be signalling that all is not well—and that serious maladjustments and disparities exist.

Prices are not all wise or all powerful. They are an important instrument, through which men function.

Acme Wire Co. declared a dividend of 50 cents on voting trust certificates for common stock, payable August 15 to stock of record July 31.

ELECTRIC EQUIPMENT

Demand Is Increasing

New York, July 28—Although purchases of electrical equipment by utilities are still well below the level for the period from 1920 through 1930, orders increased substantially in the first half of 1936, according to the Standard Statistics Company, of New York.

In the instance of one of the larger electrical equipment companies, orders for control station equipment were almost 85 per cent above those for the first six months of 1935. Moreover, those orders accounted for approximately 22 per cent of new business for the period, while demand from the same source for the first six months of last year accounted for only 13 per cent of the total.

Indications are that demand by utilities for equipment will continue to increase, in view of the high level of power production indicated for the coming year. The upward trend has thus far been restricted by the more efficient utilization of present capacity, the interchange of power between systems through interconnections, and the more even distribution of the load, with increases in demand affecting the off-peak rather than the peak load.

Relatively little capacity has been added to the New England and east north central regions, despite the sharp gain in output. Accordingly, it is safe to assume that, with further increases in output, a shortage of capacity in these regions is likely to develop, and new additions must be made for winter 1937-1938 production.

In some cases where new capacity has been added during the period from 1930 to 1935, as in the mid-Atlantic region, additional construction will be necessary in order to avoid a power shortage with continued gains in industrial activity.

Boston's Imports Up Again

Collector Maynard reports imports at Boston this week ended July 25 were $2,178,635, against $1,-294,528 a year before, and duties collected were $560,127, against $348,946. Wool imports also were larger after some recent recession at 780,899 pounds, against 182,247 a year before. Since July 1 collections were $2,015,474 against $1,-520,949, and wool imports 1,863,424 pounds against 1,223,516.

The influx of wool for one week was the largest at this stage of the season in at least the past four years. Meanwhile wool withdrawals from warehouse the past week amounted to 3985,267 pounds. Shippers sai dthe brisk wool turnover indicated increased activity in New England mills.

Carloadings Up

Carloadings in first 29 weeks of 1936 totalled 15,853,355 cars, compared with 16,790,029 cars in like 1925 period, an increase of 11.3 per cent, and with 17,177,596 cars in 1934 period, a gain of 8.8 per cent.

June Auto Financing

Dollar volume of retail financing of new passenger automobiles in June was 77 per cent above June 1935, and 16 per cent above May, 1936, the Department of Commerce reported.

RAIL OUTLOOK

Pelley SEES FALL Gains

By HUGH E. BRADSHAW

J. J. Pelley, president of the Association of American Railroads, and former president of the New York, New Haven & Hartford, believes rail co-ordinations are likely soon.

At the same time Mr. Pelley sees carriers making every effort to further reduce costs and predicts substantial increases in traffic will stimulate equipment buying.

The former New England rail chief says definite steps have been taken to inaugurate co-ordination where it is feasible. Thus the first step in reducing costs looms in the near future. The second, improvement of equipment to more efficient levels, proceeding at a good pace with the co-operation of the equipment and supply companies selling to railroads.

* * *

While co-ordination is the news of Mr. Pelley's statement, a continuing meat for traffic and a continuing interest in the stock market, and the rails in particular, is his view of the traffic outlook. He sees a sustained period of improved traffic and earnings looming for railroads, which he pictures as definitely emerged from the depression. Calling attention to the substantial rise in car-loadings, he predicted further gains in the fall months. It is this increase in revenues which the rail leader sees promoting larger equipment and repair buying. Aside from our willingness to accept Mr. Pelley's views at their face value, we are convinced that rail leaders generally would lean backward rather than forward in appraising the outlook for their industry in order to present a fair picture of future prospects.

* * *

Notebook: It is sound, informed opinions on railroads, such as that presented above that encourage our bullishness on rails. And when one of the best statistical opinion to the effect July reports will show an earnings gain of 100 per cent, there is little room left for doubt. . . And it is also well to remember that no matter how much one hears about the market running too fast on the upside, it does not apply to rails. Even as the Dow-Jones average, the group is still under 1933 highs. We suggest continuing long of good rail securities.

* * *

The unanimity of bullish opinion expressed in brokerage rooms and letters, together with the optimism of professional traders, is the one cloud on the market horizon. However, market fundamentals must take precedence over possible psychological factors, and until such time as there are clear indications of impending barriers to the advance, we much continue bullish. Some industrials are overselling at a fast clip and may need a rest. Possibly a fast session or ten of reaction will be witnessed. But in either event the recent lack of a speculative public following should operate against either being serious or lengthy.

* * *

Ticker Ticks: General Electric is delivering at last. . . And the patient holders of the past month or so are reaping their reward. . . Sperry acts well on the tape and should do better. . . in fact, it is difficult to see how the aviation group can leave it behind. . . Marshall Field boosters are back again. . . Republic Steel should soon get into the spirit of things . . . Especially with the big steels moving along. . . American Rolling Mill is another. . . Eastern industrials and rails should be bought and held, as observer said. . . And to readers we must again point out that we lack space to answer queries here. . . A self-addressed stamped envelope will bring a prompt reply.

JEWEL TEA Dividend

Jewel Tea Co. declared regular quarterly dividend of $1 on the common, payable September 30 to stock of record September 16.

PROFIT Taking Hits MARKET

RAILS ON UPGRADE

New York, July 28— The lengthy and almost uninterrupted recovery invited profit taking in today's stock market.

At the same time selling was quiet and many issues continued to push ahead, some to new high territory for the past several years. The rails, near the fourth hour, were on the upgrade.

There was little in the news to discourage buying forece, earnings and dividends being highly favorable in the majority.

Deere was a drop sort with a gain of about 3 points. Others steady to ahead included Great Northern, Delaware & Hudson, N. Y. Central, Santa Fe, Southern Pacific, Northern Chlorine, General Electric, Allied Chemical, Kennecott, American Water Works, U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Midland Steel Products, Spiegel-May-Stern, Allied Stores, Douglas Aircraft, American Aircraft, American Telephone and Western Union.

Lower Division

In the lower division were General Motors, Chrysler, Montgomery Ward, Sears Roebuck, Consolidated Edison, North American, Electric Power & Light, Anaconda, Westinghouse, Goodyear, Electric Auto-Lite and Safeway Stores. A new year's low was established by U. S. Smelting with the loss of around 3 points. Cerro de Pasco was also heavy.

Bonds were rather steady and commodities mixed. Foreign currencies did little in terms of the dollar.

A few traders, it was said, recalled that the new Federal Reserve bank requirements are in force August 15, and decided to step aside pending possible effects on money rates. Banking quarters generally, though, thought few repercussions were likely as a result of the upward revision.

Commission houses with foreign connections reported buying from abroad recently had taken a turn for the better, with selected steels, motors and rails favored.

Much interest hinged on the session late today when U. S. Steel Co. board, which was to release a second quarter financial statement and take action on the preferred dividend. In previous quarters since February, 1933, 50 cents a share has been paid on preference stock accumulations. In the second quarter, meanwhile, the company's some observers believed, enjoyed a profit on the common shares for the first time since 1930.

Current Factors

The automobile group came in for further study in view of the June output statement of General Motors, published after the close yesterday, disclosing the best earnings for the period since 1929.

With the motors corporation directors meeting again next week, many guesses on a possible boost in the dividend rate were heard in the boardroome.

A sustaining influence for merchandising issues was seen in estimates of August retail sales, which, some executives believe, will exceed the same 1935 month by about 15 per cent and may make the best comparative showing for the year to date.

Predictions were based on the high distribution levels maintained since Easter Day.

The French franc, at the beginning of foreign exchange transactions, was off .00½ of a cent at 6.61 cents, and sterling was unchanged at $5.01⅝.

Comments of Brokers

Although it is obvious that a technical reaction of a few points at least is possible at any time after such a large and sustained advance, it is difficult to be any thing save bullish with the kind of leadership the market is currently enjoying.—J. S. Wilson, Josephthal & Co.

There would appear to be little room left for doubting that the recent sideswipe movement represented a period of consolidation for the market as a whole preparatory to a new phase of advance ahead.—Hayden, Stone & Molloy, Hornblower & Weeks.

It can be concluded from the technical action of the past two days that the absorption area has been completed and is reflected in a comparatively sharp upward advance which should last for several days.—H. S. Teigus, Prentice-Blauner & Brady.

In view of the prospect that July rail earnings will show gains of more than 100 per cent above July of 1935, believe the active railroad stocks will give a good account of themselves in early future. — H. D. Comer, Paine, Webber & Co.

Once more we advise those who have not already done so, to take advantage of present prices and get out of any market laggards or semi-worthless investments.—Robert O. Lee & Co.

Roosevelt Is Right
In Following Landon

THE EXECUTIVE ORDER of the President extending the competitive merit system to postmasters of the first, second and third grades was undoubtedly influenced by the Civil Service plank in the Republican platform and the position Governor Landon has taken from the first against the continued debauchery for political power of our postmasterships.

This Farleyizing of a vast governmental enterprise which more nearly touches the average citizen than any other has been so glaring under the Roosevelt Administration that even papers friendly to President Roosevelt, like the New York Times and the New York World-Telegram, have condemned it in unsparing terms.

The Civil Service plank in the Democratic platform is a purely perfunctory utterance.

But the Republican platform, after a drastic condemnation of the use of thousands of postmasterships for purely political purposes, contains this REAL CIVIL SERVICE REFORM pledge:

"WE WILL PROVIDE SUCH CONDITIONS AS OFFER AN ATTRACTIVE PERMANENT CAREER IN GOVERNMENT SERVICE TO YOUNG MEN AND WOMEN OF ABILITY, IRRESPECTIVE OF PARTY AFFILIATIONS."

THIS is the first time that any party has pledged itself to lift the personnel of the WHOLE GOVERNMENT SERVICE out of the morass of politics onto the level of a PROFESSIONAL CAREER.

Governor Landon, ALWAYS standing four-square on Civil Service reform before the belated repentance of President Roosevelt, wired the following to the Republican National Convention on the question of our Civil Service:

"I BELIEVE THERE SHOULD BE INCLUDED EVERY POSITION IN THE ADMINISTRATIVE SERVICE BELOW THE RANK OF ASSISTANT SECRETARIES OF MAJOR DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES, AND THAT THIS INCLUSION SHOULD COVER THE ENTIRE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT."

THE difference, then, between President Roosevelt's order placing fourteen thousand postmasters under the merit system, Governor Landon's attitude and the position of the Republican Party on this question is THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN POLITICIAL EXPEDIENCY AND PRINCIPLE.

As Governor Landon sardonically remarked when he was told of the President's order:

"IT SHOWS THE ADVANTAGES OF COMPETITION."

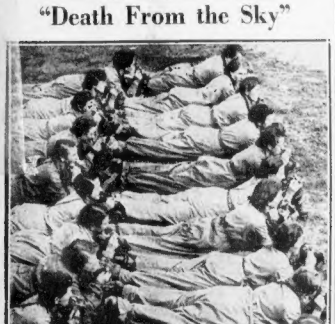
Dictator's Progress

"Roosevelt is the platform," says Senator Norris, of Nebraska.

"The state?—I am the state!" said Louis XIV of France, one of the absolutist monarchs of history.

The resemblance between these two aphorisms is obvious.

"Death From the Sky"



(Picture from International News Photograph Service.)

This picture, taken in Berlin, will interest Americans, especially those that believe there will be no non-combatants in the next war. It shows German women, garbed in gas-proofed overalls, lying flat on the ground to don gas masks in the shortest possible time. THEY WILL NOT GAMBLE WITH "DEATH FROM THE SKY" if and when enemy planes invade the country.

Europe, unhealthy territory for American meddling, sends us many a significant lesson in NATIONAL DEFENSE—more SIGNIFICANT, probably, than the war debt promises, also sent us.

New York Day by Day

By O. O. McIntyre

New York, July 28—Movie and stage presentations have ballooned a popular notion that the average newspaperman sartorially is a runner-up for a soiled bag of laundry. The Heywood Broun matter! Men who have no use for tailors, less for barbers and always nay nay the manicure Miss.

O. O. McIntyre

The picture is not true today nor ever true during several decades. Richard Harding Davis was a walking fashion plate, indeed the model for C. D. Gibson's famous and original "Gibson man." Charlie Somerville, a Broadway reporter, introduced the gold headed cane. Ed Hill is a gentleman.

George Buchanon Fife for a quarter of a century has been an inspiration to Hempstead, Long Island. Pushing 60, he suggests a walking ad for Bond street. The late Karl K. Kitchen was always valeted to a gloss. And Phil Simms has been listed among the six best-dressed men of foreign capitals.

There's Tommy Millard, too, the Brummel of Shanghai. And the dandiest dandy of the present New York era, Lucius Beebe, habited always right down to the quick. And there's Roy Howard with his zebra stripe dazzle. And the flashy Herbert Bayard Swope and trendy outfitted Floyd Gibbons. And so on without end.

Fannie Brice was a victim recently of one of those "dying rumors" that whisper out of nowhere and engulf the celebrity victim in the lethal grip of an incurable malady.

Nearly every biggity faces it at one time or another. It is one of Broadway's prime diversions—especially after midnight—to chant despair. It gives mawkish sentimentalists an inning to romanticize and remember when.

Barney Gallant's experiment in uptown night clubbing—his second effort—again ended disastrously for the dapper impresario with the blowtorch beard and Oxonian accent.

Barney seems essentially of The Village, The Village of Mme. Bertillotte, The Purple Pig and The Black Cat. For years he prospered down there. The last round-up of the uptown alumnors included a "Let's go down to Barney's!"

But Barney Gallant has had a life packed with ups and downs. And nothing will daunt his robin-bright cheerfulness. He was a press agent for a Mexican revolution and when it nearly closed in on him was smuggled across the Laredo line under the seat in a drawing room occupied by Will Hogg.

He has journalized in Fleet street and along Park Row, been a night clerk at the Raffles in Singapore, served as a secret service agent in Egypt and shipped around the Horn on a wind-jammer as cabin boy.

Whatever Destiny holds for Barney, he has tasted life. The brackish with the sweet.

One of the depression upshoots has been nice going for the Full Dress Suit Rental parlors. They used to be confined almost solely to the lower East Side, but now they are numerous on Broadway.

Many lads who had several dinner jackets and at least a couple of evening suits, have become—and quite unashamedly—renters.

The average price for a full dress suit is $5 an evening and $1 for a silk hat. The size of the deposit depends upon the condition of the garments.

The First Full Dress Suit, incidentally, is a sartorial symbol of parental anguish. To most fathers and mothers it signalizes the shedding of the boyhood cocoon—and flight toward that ever dangerous triad of worldly beacons, the cigaret, cocktail and chorus lady! Sonny has become a man!

It'll Take Years to Wear Off!

Cartoon by Hanny

He was a normal baby once,
His skin a healthy pink,
Until he fell for crackpot stunts
And played with Brain Trust ink.
He smeared his little self until
His native color fled.
No wonder Mom and Pop feel ill—
Their kid is in the Red!

The Government Finances drip
With ruddy unsaet ink.
It will not be enough to dip
The urchin in the sink.
Though Tax Slaves toil to pay the bill
And scrub for years and years,
The victim of the ink will still
Be RED behind the ears.

Two Clear Issues

Reprinted from the Beverly Hills, Cal., Citizen, of which Will Rogers, Jr., has been part owner and editor since last November.

Newspaper work has been his major interest for several years.

Before entering college in 1931, the noted humorist's son worked for six months on a Fort Worth, Texas, newspaper. His work in Beverly Hills has shown that he inherits his father's practical common sense and devotion to American ideals.

By WILL ROGERS, JR.

Now that the hullabaloo attendant upon the national conventions has faded, two political platforms emerge alike in some respects, different in others.

In November the people of this country will go to the polls to elect a President. Whether or not they heed the platform or the personality back of it, it is evident now that the result is to be of as great significance as any election held in the 150 years of this nation's existence.

We have reached a point foreseen by Lord Macaulay, the eminent British parliamentarian, after he had read the document of the Colonists known as the Constitution of the United States.

He commented that it was the country came into financial straits and officeseekers started exploiting its broad powers to further their ends. He predicted, no doubt, the very same demagoguery that we have seen and heard so much of in the past four years.

We now stand at a point where the real test of our cherished document is imminent. We have two clearly defined issues, neither of which is set forth with much clarity in the verbiage of party platforms.

The one way is championed by Landon and the Republicans, the other by Roosevelt and the Democrats.

By going to the right we, in a measure at least, reiterate our faith in the document that has so skilfully guided us through the years of the goal of the greatest nation of all time.

By going to the left, we indicate in no uncertain terms that we are willing to abandon or at least greatly modify the Constitution.

The choice in the election this year is just that simple, but in its simplicity it offers a crucial test of the very roots of our system of government.

It is a safe conclusion that the New Deal will interpret a return to power as a signal to go farther than it has gone.

A sweeping republication is the quickest and most efficient way to indicate that the people of this country have a real and abiding faith in the wisdom of their forefathers and that they regard the precepts of a constitutional government the soundest on earth.

'Dear Govt.'

By Winston Norman

Hon. Mr. Farley
c/o Dead Letter Dept.
DEAR MR. FARLEY:

I have took pen in hand to whisper a Secrit in your ear. Mr. Farley. This here is goin to be a Dirty Campain, just like you says it would.

Take Fish, for instance. Guvnor Landon went & caught more fish on one weak than Mr. Roosevelt could ketch in 3 weeks. My golly, if he beats Mr. Roosevelt that easy at fishin for fish, how bad could he beat him at fishin for votes?

Another reazon this is goin to be a Dirty Campain. Guvnor Landon rose up last Thursday & give a Radio Speach to millions of folks. He done us Democrats a dirty trick, he brung up things like the Budjit and Unemployment.

Well, Mr. Farley, I am now comin to the Dirtyest thing of all, it was somethin that my Next Door Neighbor says about you. He says to me last night, "Say," he says, "didn't I read in the paper that Farley had give up the Postmaster job?"

"Yes," I says, "he did."

"That's funny," he says, "because I'm still gettin my mail reglar, 2 times per day, just like I did when he was Postmaster."

"Well," I says, "what of it?"

"Well," he says, "if the Mail is going out just as good without him, would you please tell me what Farley's been doin, for three long years, to earn his $15,000?"

Yours worled,
W. NORMAN.

Lewis and Tugwell
Human Side of the News
By Edwin C. Hill
THE GLOBE TROTTER OF HEARST METROTONE NEWS

Edwin C. Hill

The news from Washington has it that the belligerent John L. Lewis and the smooth Dr. Rexford Guy Tugwell have become close friends. It may not be their personalities which have thrown them together, but it may be a common end, an end to be accomplished in 1940.

It is common gossip in the backstairs of politics that Lewis and some of his lieutenants in the "One Big Union" campaign are looking ahead to 1940, with the purpose of running a Labor Party candidate for President. Already they have entered a ticket in New York State, which fact should provide plenty of food for thought to those who are opposed to class warfare in the United States and to those who want to maintain the American system of keeping our national politics free from rule by class.

It is just another move in the direction of alien and European ideals and ideas. England had a labor movement. Russia's government is supposed to be a labor one, as is France's. New Zealand made such an experiment, which embodied most of the Roosevelt Administration's philosophy, and it brought New Zealand to the brink of ruin.

WHAT MAY HAPPEN

I wonder what the statesmen and politicians in the different states and cities think of this new movement. If it is carried forward under the guise of a movement to re-elect Roosevelt, and if it has any success, we may look for the day when our supposedly elected representatives will be taking their orders from those who can seize the reins in labor circles.

Lewis has the reputation of being a fire-eater. At a recent labor convention, he had a fist fight with the chief of the Carpenters' Union.

Lewis, a Republican for a long time, had some remarks to make about Al Smith when Smith announced that he could not and would not support the present administration. It never seemed to occur to him that he, Lewis, was leaving his party because he preferred the Roosevelt way of doing things.

While Lewis has a reputation of being a foe of the Radical and Communistic elements in labor, he does not seem to be throwing aside their support in his One Big Union campaign. Lewis likes to make messages, envisioning the American workers as poverty-stricken wage slaves. It is true that the unemployment among miners is very high. Yet Lewis' salary was raised recently to $25,000 and he has a war chest, supposedly of $500,000, for the unionization of the steel workers.

Dr. Tugwell may not go in for fisticuffs, but seldom, if ever in America, has there been made such a Communistic speech as he delivered in California to the Democrats of that state, an official speech to the official members of the Democratic party. That was the speech in which Tugwell, the ruling philosopher of the Roosevelt administration, said down the purposes of the administration and the line along which it was marching.

A RADICAL SPEECH

Without mincing a word, Tugwell told how the New Deal aimed at a coalition of farmers and labor to overthrow the present economic and political system of the United States. Dr. Tugwell made no bones about the issues of class war and class hatred. His candor was as unique as his remarks were revolutionary.

The struggle was coming, said the doctor, and it would not be a pleasant one. However, it was the duty of this New Deal arms to prevent bloodshed, if possible, in tearing down the economic system.

It has occurred to me always that the Golden Rule is not only inculcated in the young of this country, but that also it is practiced very widely among our people. "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you," I think, the guiding light for most of us. Dr. Tugwell doesn't think so. In that speech he pictured us as a scheming, greedy pack at each other's throats and in need of a government such as Dr. Tugwell would design to keep us from preying upon one another.

Thus we had the doctor's admonition that "if we confused the Ten Commandments or Christianity with this New Deal war for some sort of a socialized state, the New Deal didn't want us on its side."

Don't forget that the Doctor warned you!

Listen, World!
By Elsie Robinson

Elsie Robinson

She's a Cannibal! But you'd never guess it. Soft-spoken, gentle, helpless and affectionate you'd search far to find a more appealing person than little Mrs. Gray.

"What a wonderful Wife and Mother!" chants the admiring chorus. "So devoted to her family! Utterly unselfish . . . never has a thought outside her home. Can't bear to have her children out of her sight. No wonder they worship her!"

DIFFERENT NOW

So the world sees Martha Gray. So she sees herself. Never for a moment does she doubt that she's God's Greatest Gift to a husband, son and daughter. And once her son and daughter agreed with her. But now—

Now they're beginning to have their doubts.

It was jolly once to have a smiling mother waiting for you when you came home . . . or a tearful mother leaning on you, praising and petting you.

Yes, 15 years ago when you were a freckled little tike of ten, or a skinny little girl of eight, it was great to have Mother fussing over you all the time, telling everyone how she couldn't do without her "Wonderful Lover" or "Precious Sweetheart."

Maybe you squirmed, sometimes, when she kissed you before the other fellows. Maybe you pouted when she treated you like a baby before the other girls. Or insisted on going everywhere with you. Yet way down in your heart you felt it was swell to have a mother like that.

But now! Well, now it's different. Now you wish . . . now you wonder . . .

Martha Gray's son and daughter couldn't tell you what it is they wish or wonder. It was never even told themselves. But deep in their spirits there is a rising restlessness and rebellion against the very things which once seemed so exactly comforting . . . against the very "unselfish devotion" which the world so admires.

"Is it really 'unselfish devotion'?"—there's the dark and dangerous doubt which is taking shape within Martha Gray's dutiful son and daughter. They're grown now, 23 and 25, and working. Jim's head of a shipping department; Jane's buyer in the house dresses department. Smart youngsters, doing more than well for their years. Everyone envies them their lovely home life.

But is it really a "lovely home life"?

Is it so "noble" for a mother to fuss over a man of 25, a woman of 23, as she fussed over helpless babies—binding them with kisses, browbeating them with tears?

SYNTHETIC LOVE

Should a family or the world at large admire a woman who has "no interest outside her home" . . . who "lives only in her children" and "cannot live without them" . . . who uses every emotional device to prevent them from leaving her, making homes or following adventures of their own?

Is such a mother really unselfish and devoted? She is not! A truly unselfish mother sends her children forth to a larger life . . . rejoices when they make a life for herself, independent of theirs.

A woman who "lives only in her children" after their childhood has passed, and who shackles them by her helplessness, is no true mother—

SHE IS A CANNIBAL.

Such a creature feeds upon human life as surely as any man-eating savage. Under the pretext of loving her young, she devours them—destroys that which once she created.

That's That

A plain, average everyday American citizen spoke to millions of other Americans Thursday night from Topeka, Kan. The speaker was Governor Landon of Kansas. He was accepting the nomination for the Presidency. His acceptance speech was a masterpiece of clear thinking, sound reasoning and plain speaking. Nobody ever crammed more common sense into the same number of words. He had a rattling good speech and he delivered it in a most effective manner.

Governor Landon is neither an orator nor a showman. He makes no pretense of being anything but a plain, average man. He thinks as does the average American citizen. He has the viewpoint of the ordinary working man and the business man. The American people are fed up on the glibness of the bunco-steerers of the New Deal. The homely truths they heard from the lips of Governor Landon, the simplicity and the earnestness of his speech must have been a welcome relief.

Governor Landon had something to say Thursday night, and he said it plainly, directly and convincingly. He made no fantastic promises. In a straightforward fashion, he told the American people what he thinks should be done, what he will do if he is elected President, and there is every reason to believe he will keep his word. He has a record of doing what he says he will do.

There is nothing complicated in Governor Landon's program. It calls for no governmental magic. It requires no master mind. It is so simple even a child can understand it. Billions of dollars of buying power have been dammed up in this country by the depression and by lack of public confidence in the recovery efforts of the New Dealers. Release of that buying power will provide employment for all the jobless for years to come. The remedy, as Governor Landon sees it, is release this buying power and promote business, industrial and employment expansion by freeing business and industry from governmental intimidation and hostility, from public squanderings and crippling taxation, from uncertain monetary policies, and from private monopoly.

"The welfare of our people is not recorded on the financial pages of the newspapers," Governor Landon declared. "It cannot be measured in stock market prices. The real test is to be found in the ability of the average American to engage in business, to obtain a job, to be a self-supporting and self-respecting member of his community. American initiative is not a commodity to be delivered in pound packages through a governmental bureau. It is a vital force in the life of our nation and must be freed."

There is no group of people to whom Governor Landon's speech should have made a stronger appeal than the millions of unemployed. His declaration that "There is no future on the relief rolls" cannot be challenged. But that is the only future millions of unemployed face under the New Deal. The most they can look forward to is existing and raising their children under a work or cash dole system. That more emphatically is not an American future. As Governor Landon pointed out:

"In 1935 the primary need was jobs for the unemployed. In 1936 the primary need still is jobs for the unemployed."

Governor Landon effectively spiked New Deal propaganda that jobless people must vote for the re-election of President Roosevelt or they will be left without either employment or relief. He declared that "Those who need relief will get it." Then he said, and the emphasis he used made it plain he meant every word, "We will not take our economies out of the allotments to the unemployed. We will take them out of the hides of the political exploiters." When he considers the hundreds of thousands of political appointees who are holding good salaried administrative and supervisory jobs in the WPA, the Social Security setup and other New Deal rackets, every man on relief knows there is an enormous saving which can be taken "out of the hides of the political exploiters."

The common sense of Governor Landon's approach to the farm problem will appeal to all thinking people. "Our farmers," he said, "are entitled to all of the home market they can supply without injustice to the consumer. The (present) administration has taken the American farmer out of foreign markets and put the foreign farmer into the American market. The loss of markets, both at home and abroad, far outweighs the value of all the benefits paid to farmers." In 1932, this country sold 7,868,000 bushels of corn to foreign countries and imported 344,000 bushels of corn. Last year, we exported only 177,382 bushels of corn and imported 43,200,000 bushels.
